

Stevenon Says GOP Promise of Tax Cut 'Just So Much Talk,' Contradicts Pledge

Libertyville, Ill. — U.P. — Adlai E. Stevenson today charged that the Republican's promise of a tax cut was "so much election talk" and was a contradiction of President Eisenhower's pledge to cut the national debt.

Stevenson, who plans to begin a week-long tour around the country next Monday for personal conferences with local political leaders, held a news conference at his Libertyville farm.

The Democratic presidential nominee told newsmen at his country home here that he was "perplexed" by the Republican tax slash promise "in view of the fact that the President repeatedly has been against a tax cut and has been in favor of applying any surplus to the reduction of the national debt."

"It sounds to me like an expressed contradiction of the President," Stevenson said.

Jibes At Republicans

"I think it's so much election talk, myself," Stevenson said that the Republican Convention applauded when Sen. Prescott Bush, (R-Conn.) said: "We have balanced the budget."

"This was certainly an accurate reflection of what interests the Republican leaders most, not the education of our children, not a fair break for farmers, not the growing menace of Communism in the world, not America's waning influence, but a balanced budget," Stevenson said.

Bush was chairman of the Republican Platform Committee at the GOP Convention in San Francisco.

As for the Republican's civil rights plank, Stevenson told newsmen "I can't see any marked difference" from the Democratic plank.

To Speak at Detroit

Stevenson also announced he would make a Labor Day address Sept. 3 in Detroit at the invitation of the Detroit and Wayne County Federation of Labor and the Wayne County CIO Council. He would be introduced by Sen. Patrick V. McNamara (D-Mich.).

Stevenson starts Monday on a whirlwind air trip to all parts of the country, with his running mate, Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) to talk to local political leaders and lay the groundwork for the all-out grass roots campaign. First stop is Santa Fe, N.M.

"I want to make sure we strike together in hammering home the great issues of 1956," he said.

Stevenson, who won the Democratic nomination despite opposition of Mr. Truman and Kefauver, two of the party's greatest campaigners, said he looked forward to the showdown battle with Mr. Eisenhower.

Relaxed and bouncing again after the gruelling convention battle last week, Stevenson said, "I don't find it as wearing and tiring as most people think it is."

Behind what appeared to be the "new Stevenson" emerged a powerful figure of "an old pro" used to winning elections, James A. Finnegan, his campaign manager.

Finnegan, 51-year-old Philadelphia political boss, engineered the election of the first Democratic mayor in 67 years in Philadelphia.

No Contest of Dollars

"We know we cannot win a contest of dollars," Finnegan said. "The Republicans can outspend us 10-to-1."

"They'll have expensive television time to burn but Gov. Stevenson is going to overcome this by carrying the election to the people and by making this a real person-to-person campaign, not just a canned radio-television one such as the Republicans are planning for Mr. Eisenhower," he said.

Stevenson said his experience batling Kefauver in the primaries convinced him there was no substitute for going directly to the voters.

"There's nothing like seeing and talking to people face to face," he said.

"I want to talk first-hand with our local and state leaders about our presidential campaign plans and get their ideas," Stevenson said.

Schedule Told

Stevenson's schedule called for him and Kefauver to meet in Santa Fe Monday with Democratic leaders from New Mexico, Texas, Oklahoma, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and Arizona. On Tuesday they were to meet at Bonneville Dam, Wash., for leaders from Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana; Wednesday at Sioux City, Iowa, for Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota and Wisconsin; Thursday at Knoxville, Tenn., for Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Florida, Kentucky, Mississippi, South Carolina, North Carolina and Virginia; and Friday at Chicago for Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Missouri and Ohio.

The times and places for three other meetings to cover the remainder of the states were to be announced later.

Taking Aim

As a result of conferences with local leaders, Stevenson was expected to decide where to aim his "whistle-stop" efforts. He planned to use both train and motorcades to saturate areas where he believes he can pick up the electoral college strength needed to turn the tide against Mr. Eisenhower.

Finnegan said Stevenson's "actual" campaign wasn't scheduled to begin until Sept. 13, when he will make the first of six scheduled 30 minute nationally televised addresses.

Stevenson's headquarters emphasized that next week's trip was "not to be confused with an ordinary campaign tour for its objective is neither speech-making or public appearance."

Stevenson was expected to use the meetings to instill a "will-to-win" spirit among Democrats across the country.

"There has never been a tour like this just before a regular campaign," Finnegan said.

"The governor wants to make an up to the minute first-hand check on the main issues and he wants personally to confer with local leaders and local candidates in the fight to bring these issues home to the American people and to get out the biggest Democratic vote in history."

Quotes From the News

By UNITED PRESS

New York — Sen. Herbert Lehman, 78-year-old New York Democrat, who announced he would not be a candidate for re-election because of the stress and strain of another campaign:

"I wish that my term of office did not expire this year. I am not only in the best of health but the good Lord has endowed me with strength and vigor that have not greatly diminished with the passing of the years."

New York—Democratic Rep. Emmanuel Celler of New York on his attempt to win his party's nomination for the Senate seat of the retiring Sen. Herbert Lehman:

"If my 34 years of legislative service in Congress can be deemed a stepping stone, I'm willing to make the ascent."

Jackson, Miss. — Mississippi Gov. James P. Coleman on announcing that he will support Democratic nominee Adlai E. Stevenson for the presidency:

"Our gains in Chicago are too great for us to consider bolting the ticket."

Washington—Democratic National Chairman Paul M. Butler on the necessity for gathering campaign funds:

"... Nothing is more important to the success of the Democratic party than the speedy acquisition of the funds... needed to get the Democratic story... on television, radio and the printed word."

Falmouth, England—Henri Beaudout, 29, skipper and navigator of the three-man raft "Le'egare II" which drifted from Nova Scotia across the storm-tossed Atlantic to England in 88 days:

"When our food ran out, we practically lived on fish which we beared or caught with lines. For drink we had rain waters. I am thoroughly sick of fish."

Libertyville, Ill.—Democratic presidential nominee Adlai E. Stevenson on taking along running mate Sen. Estes Kefauver of Tennessee to talk with local and state leaders on campaign plans:

"I want to make sure we strike together in hammering home the great issues of 1956."
