Pigeon Problem Plagues Cities

Chicago—(U.P.)—Cities throughout the country have been driven to extremes to get rid of pigeons that roost, nest, fight and raise families on the ledges of public buildings.

The American Public Works Association said pigeons have three character defects that make them a social problem:

1. They make too much noise.
2. Their uncivilized habits deface the surroundings and imperil people walking below.
3. Their very numbers mar architectural beauty.

Among cities which recently have reported the need for firm anti-pigeon measures are Chicago, Denver, Montreal, Cincinnati, New Orleans, Baltimore and New York.

The Chicago Transit Authority hired the Twin City Pigeon Eliminating Co. of St. Paul, Minn., to rid its elevated railway stations of pigeons. The CTA tried to conduct its own anti-pigeon program by use of sharp-toothed metal stripping along roosting beams. But the birds didn't mind the discomfort enough to go away.

The St. Paul firm is setting box-like chicken wire traps, using shell corn, water and female pigeons as lures.

Denver's statehouse has been a favorite roosting place for pigeons, and officials there have used a chemical that exudes an odor which doesn't bother human beings but which pigeons find highly objectionable.

In Montreal, a glue-like substance was used as a pigeon repellent on the city hall. New Orleans and Cincinnati have used a chemical compound made by National Bird Control Laboratories of Skokie, Ill.

New York has undertaken to remind citizens that it is against the litter law to feed pigeons.

The Medical Roundup

After reading my recent column on Maxine Davis' book "The Sexual Responsibility of Women," several women have asked me if anything could be done for the impotence that comes to many men in middle life.

One woman who writes feelingly and intelligently—and anonymously—says "I feel that I am sleeping with a stranger—a good-night kiss seems too much to ask for. . . . If a man is not smart enough to understand a woman's nature, no wonder the divorce courts are full of cases."

Some of the women who are still highly sexed in their 40s or 50s miss a sexual life while others say that although they can easily put up with the lack of sexual life in itself, they cannot easily put up with the lack of any sign of affection on the part of their husbands. So often an impotent man fails even to kiss his wife or to caress her in any way. The man retires to his own bed or to his own room. The couple live like brother and sister. One woman says, "The wife abhors the thought of being just a housekeeper to the man she loves. . . . Impotence is not normal, and it is not normal for us to be forced to accept it, no matter how much we love them. They should be enlightened as to their responsibilities, and to the keeping of their wife's love before they lose it."

So often, in these cases, the wife for a while begs her husband to go to a physician to see if anything can be done. Usually, not only does the man refuse to do this, but he refuses even to listen, or discuss the subject. In this behavior, I think such men are unfair and unwise, although it is true that in most cases a physician cannot help. About all he can do is to discuss the psychological factors. Perhaps he can try the effect of male hormone. Unfortunately, when, as usually happens, the impotent man's troubles are psychic in origin, and he has all the male hormone he needs, the taking of more cannot help him.

In many cases the wife has allowed herself to get stout and unattractive, or perhaps she herself has failed to show much affection. Perhaps she is willing to show some affection only once or twice a month, and this has caused her husband to turn against her. In many cases of this type in which I have been able to study the man, I have found that his sexual drive was never strong, and hence perhaps what little drive he had was gone by the time he was 45. Oftentimes, if the wife had remained a good sexual partner, the man might have gone on being adequate for several more years, but when his wife was a poor partner he soon lost any strong desire to touch her.

In hundreds of cases I have

Oregon Firms Ask Income Tax Refunds

Portland—(U.P.)—Suits asking nearly $150,000 in income tax refunds were filed by two Oregon paper manufacturing firms here yesterday.

Oregon Pulp and Paper company asked that $117,000 be refunded and Columbia River Paper Mills ordered a return of $24,000.

Oregon Pulp declared federal income tax officials disallowed the $117,000 refund to which the company said it is entitled be-

Hollywood—(U.P.)—The remarkable success of the recent household hints featured on the television show I commit on CBS each weekday prompts me to immortalize in printed form some of the advice we have given.

I fear that unless they appear in printed form many of these domestic gems will be forgotten. Here, therefore, is a list of household shortcuts, fresh from "The Johnny Carson Show," wrapped in newsprint to preserve their rich, nutlike flavor:

1. Fruit stains may be removed from expensive fabrics with a pair of scissors and some small patterns. The patterns should be cut exactly to the size and shape of the stains to be removed, then pinned directly over the stains. Cut around the patterns with the scissors removed.
2. If you are bothered by earthquakes, you can rid your home of these household pests by removing the house from its foundations and floating it in mercury.
3. To clean out zinc pipes, first drain the pipes, then pour in undiluted sulphuric acid. Toss in a lighted match and stand back. The explosion will blow the pipes clean out of the house.
4. If the elevator in your house is inclined to stick between floors, try rubbing a little soap in the shaft.
5. For an original and catchy welcome mat for your front door, paint "step in!" on the trigger of that old bear trap in your attic and place it on the doorstep.
6. Tired of washing dishes after every meal? Try hiring someone to do it. It's astonishing how little trouble dirty dishes can be when this method is used.
7. If you want gypsies in your back yard, these decorative and picturesque nomads can be attracted by spraying the premises liberally with money.
8. To prevent bears from nesting in your basement, put a few caribou in it. It's well known that bears and caribou do not share the same basements.
9. If your child refuses to practice his penmanship, have a fresh concrete driveway put in and give the kid a twig. He'll get plenty of practice.

cause of an assessment for additional Oregon corporation excise taxes.

Columbia River contended that it is entitled to a refund because it overestimated taxable income and paid the government more than was required.
