Two Diamonds IDENTICAL IN WEIGHT Why does One Cost More?

If you were interested in a diamond and it cost considerably more than another of the same, or greater, weight, you would want to know why. The reason is: finer color, cutting and clarity.

By means of precision instruments in our laboratory, the two diamonds are greatly magnified. One is flawless—no imperfection mars its clarity. Its exquisite color is that of a gem stone. The other shows a small carbon spot. It is a "lumpy" diamond—with a slightly yellowish cast.

No two diamonds are ever identical. Here, however, you can see, graphically, how one differs from another. Here, you know, unquestionably, the qualities it possesses. In this knowledge, there is great satisfaction.
