

Inspection of Plane Wreckage Scheduled

Albany — (U.P.) — The chairman of the Oregon State Board of Aeronautics, Ralph Scroggin of Lebanon, left yesterday for the top of Yoran mountain 25 miles east of Oakridge to inspect the wreckage of a Navy plane which four Albany men discovered Saturday.

With him were Don Harms, Ronald Sloan, Edwin T. Kraft and his son, Eddie Kraft. The four were hiking from Gold Lake toward Odell lake and had scaled Yoran mountain. In descending they spotted the plane only a short distance from the peak.

The Navy has tentatively identified the craft as a trainer that crashed in 1947 fatally injuring the pilot, Robert L. Rubottom of McMinnville. However, the Albany group expressed belief that the scars on fire trees believed by the plane appeared to be relatively fresh as did the wreckage itself.

Six Condemnations Result From Survey

Pilot meat inspections during the state's second round program in Baker, Union and Jackson counties resulted in six condemnations out of 1,072 animals checked, says Dr. Rolla Sexauer, supervisor of the program for the state department of agriculture.

The animals were checked before and after slaughter, with three cattle, one sheep and two swine rejected in post mortem inspections. Inspections included 481 cattle, 72 calves, 148 sheep, one goat and 370 swine.

Parts of animals condemned as unfit for human consumption totaled 404. The rejections were 382 livers; 20 heads; one heart and one tongue. Inspectors also rejected five pounds of contaminated neck meat and 60 pounds of mutton.

Allen Swift Has Played in More Than 1,000 Television Shows as Everything

By WILLIAM EWALD United Press Correspondent

New York — (U.P.) — Allen Swift is both a man and a mouse. In fact, two kinds of mouse.

He is also a tea kettle, a coffee pot, a gurgling sink, Howdy Doodly, Dinky Duck, several species of bird and the voice of yogurt.

You probably hear Swift's voice echoing through the confines of your living room more frequently than any other TV personality, but the chances are you never recognize it. The reason—Swift's voice assumes as many shapes as salami.

"I do voices, all kinds of voices, any kind of voices," said Swift today. "I've played in more than 1,000 network radio shows—mugs, old codgers, kids, everything. I've done more than 50 different characters on 'Howdy Doodly,' including Howdy Doodly himself.

"I do movie cartoons — Herman the Mouse, Mighty Mouse.

Also just about all the voices for UPA cartoons in the East.

Does Mostly Commercials "But my principal activity right now is TV film commercials. As far as I know, there isn't anybody who can do as many kinds of voices as I do."

Within the past few weeks Swift has provided the voices for more than a score of the commercials you'll see on your home screen this season. Among others — two brands of cigarettes, a hair tonic, a watch, a soft drink, a beer, an instant coffee, a razor blade, a spaghetti, a macaroni, a candy bar and a five-cent deodorant pad.

"I usually do the announcing as well as the characters," said Swift. "For some commercials like pills, you have to give 'em a real dignified voice like Norman Brokenshire — sort of like an old uncle telling you how to beat your troubles.

"You have to be serious about most drug products and for some reason, yogurt. The yogurt people feel too young jokes have been made about their product.

"But a lot of ad agencies are going for real mad voices now. They're making humorous commercials—I've got a couple coming out for a candy bar and a hair cream."

Voice of a House Swift is a specialist at providing a voice for objects. He has done such things as houses, kitchen sinks and three-way lamps.

"What I do is try to identify each object with some kind of person," said Swift. "You take a perking coffee pot—it's got a big, deep, hearty kind of personality, so you give it that kind of voice.

"A tea kettle is different. A tea pot is quite delicate, very British with a hiss in its articulation.

"Now, a three-way lamp is a little more difficult. You have to do it with voice level—low and dull for a low light, medium light for a medium light and then high and happy and high pitched for that bright light."

The 32-year-old Swift also tackles one other job occasionally for ad agencies — imitating TV stars for prospective sponsors.

"They'll make up a sample portion of a program on a record with me imitating somebody like Arthur Godfrey. I can imitate just about any one's voice with an hour's practice. The sponsor never knows and it works out just fine."

MAINE A "BAD WORD"

Gettysburg, Pa. — (U.P.) — President Eisenhower told the big GOP rally at his farm Wednesday how thousands of Republicans from coast to coast are engaged in the battle for votes. He spoke of workers from "Los Angeles to Maine." At the mention of Maine, where Democrats scored a sweeping victory Tuesday, he stopped and with a wide grin said, "that's a bad word."

The Family Council

Editor's note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a woman's editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual report. The Family Council does not give advice; it merely reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

R.J.H. — Our daughter should leave him.

Gertrude — My parents have embittered him.

R.J.H. — Our daughter married a worthless man three years ago despite our strong objections, and all our worst fears have come true. They now have a baby, but the husband is irresponsible, fails to provide her with enough to live on and treats her abominably. I suspect that he even beats her.

My wife and I have been trying to persuade her to leave him and return home to us. I feel that there is nothing in the future for her if she stays with him, except endless misery for herself, her child and the other children that may come along. We certainly could give her and her child a better home than her husband will ever provide for them.

Our daughter practically admits everything we believe about her husband, but she still refuses to leave him and come home. She argues that she wants to stick by her bargain, and she even seems to resent our speaking our mind about him.

Gertrude — Things have certainly not worked out well in my marriage, and I sometimes despair of the future. But I do not think going home to my parents would solve anything.

While my husband has made himself hateful to me many times, I cannot help thinking that my parents have brought out the worst in him. I think they were very crude in their criticism and hurt him deeply. Whenever he reacted to their criticism with some comment, I tried to defend my parents and I think this has turned his feelings against me.

It seems to me that my parents could help best by trying to change their attitude. I realize they are concerned for my welfare and find it hard to stand by while my husband mistreats me, but they have made my husband feel the bitterness that he turns on me.

I feel that there is nothing else for me to do but to try to work this thing out, and I do wish my parents would try helping us my way.

The Council: The husband may really be as worthless as the parents of the wife think he is.

but why should they persist in trying to prove it?

Their daughter made her decision in spite of their strong objections and she still feels that her parents are wrong. When they urge her to return home, they are probably making her feel more strongly resolved not to do that, even if she wanted a retreat.

What the daughter says about her parents antagonizing the husband against her may have some validity. Certainly it is a mistake for the parents to persist in criticizing the husband when their daughter gives a very persuasive reason why they should not do so.

When a marriage takes place despite the strong objections of parents, it is always wise for the parents to change their attitude and give the marriage a chance to prove them to have been wrong. In the present circumstances, it may be difficult for the parents to make an abrupt change now, but they could possibly help this marriage by removing themselves as a factor at least for some time.

13-Year-Old Takes Interest in Movie

Titusville, Pa. — (U.P.) — Gary L. Shreffler, 13, and his eighth grade classmates at Townsville Consolidated school were given a treat last spring.

They were shown a movie during class time. The film was distributed by the American Cancer society.

Gary, like his fellow classmates, thought the film a good excuse for clowning around. But, as the projector whiffed and the voice on the sound track explained the danger signals of cancer, Gary took sudden interest.

That afternoon Gary went home and asked his mother to take him to a doctor. He thought he had cancer.

His mother took Gary to the Titusville hospital where his suspicions were confirmed. He had, in fact, a very advanced case.

Gary stayed at the hospital and doctors fought to save his life.

They lost the battle Wednesday when Gary died.

Israeli Watchmen Reported Killed

Jerusalem, Israeli Sector — (U.P.) — at least two Israeli watchmen were reported killed by infiltrators from Jordan today. Another was missing in the latest of a series of border clashes that raised a grave new threat to Middle East security.

Israeli sources said Jordanians killed the watchmen after slipping into Israel south of the Dead Sea. The incident raised the two-day death toll to at least 26. A third Israeli watchman was reported missing in the latest incident.

At least 24 Arabs were killed Wednesday in what preliminary investigations showed were apparently Israeli incursions into Jordanian and Egyptian territory.

The slaying of the Israelis today was apparently Jordanian retaliation for Wednesday's raids by Israeli troops which, in turn were believed to be retaliation for the death of six Israelis Monday.
