Two Men Speaker For UN Chapter

Discussion on the Suez canal situation, and a talk on the structure of the United Nations featured a meeting of the Medford chapter, Oregon United Nations association, held Thursday night. The meeting was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Rode in the Griffin Creek district, and followed a potluck dinner.

Following the Suez discussion, the group voted to direct an inquiry to United Nations headquarters seeking information on how that body might proceed to help solve the situation.

First speaker of the evening was Mr. Rode, who talked on the structure of the United Nations. Mr. Rode, an attorney, stressed that one can never come to know an organization by merely studying its make up, but only by watching its functions and operation.

Mr. Rode pointed out that many forget the United Nations is only one part of the superstructure of international law, and that the vast amount of precedent and history-making procedures in the past cannot be cast off.

Through international law, certain values have come to rely upon certain solutions to certain problems, he said, and added that in many cases these have worked satisfactorily between nations.

"International law is a great realist," he added. "It realizes that situations exist, but does not attempt to solve them." While many citizens cry out against secret treaties and secret negotiations between nations, Mr. Rode said that in actual practice much good is often accomplished by secret meetings, whereas these same problems, openly discussed, would not be solved so satisfactorily.

He also pointed out that the United Nations should be regarded as a "last ditch" resort, and not as a "catch all" for every dispute between nations.

In evaluating the United Nations, Mr. Rode stressed that everyone should remember that "what should be" and "what is" are two different things, and not expect too much of the UN.

Harlan P. Bosworth reviewed the history of the Suez canal, telling of its construction, cost and operation in the past and pointed out that President Gamal Nasser "jumped the gun" but by 12 years, since the canal was to have been put under Egyptian control at that time.

He explained how the canal stock is owned, and said that for some unexplained reason, investors are buying the stock in considerable quantity since the canal was nationalized by the Egyptian government.

Mr. Bosworth said many believe President Nasser's move is an effort to advance his own cause, and to unite the Arabs, possibly in a holy war against the western nations. It was pointed out that Russia is seizing every opportunity to aid the Egyptians.

During the business session, conducted by President Lawrence Solin, various members of the chapter offered to aid the state organization financially.
