AAUW Grant Assigned to Italian Woman

The named international fellowship grant of Medford chapter, American Association of University Women, has been assigned to a woman from Italy, according to Mrs. Stanley C. Jones Jr. and Mrs. LeRoy J. Smith, Medford fellowship co-chairmen.

Eight 5300 grants from seven Oregon branches have been assigned to women from Italy, India, Israel and the Netherlands. A ninth named fellowship from The Dalles will be combined with other funds for an American scholar.

Medford's grant, combined with the same amount from Eugene, will aid Giuseppina Maltoni, Italy.

One of the means by which money is obtained for Medford's grant is sponsorship of a children's play each year. This year the play is Johnny Applesseed, to be shown at the Craterian theater October 9.

Miss Maltoni received her B. S. degree with highest honors in biological science in 1955 from the University of Bologna where she held a scholarship for four years. Following her graduation, she worked in a chemical laboratory.

She has chosen the University of Rochester for her work and as a graduate student there will study chromosome and radiation biology problems. As a student at the Institute of Comparative Anatomy at the University of Bologna, Miss Maltoni proved her capability as a biologist in course work as well as in research. It was pointed out.

Upon her return to Italy, Miss Maltoni plans a career of teaching and research.

The grant assigned her is similar to grants from Albany, Klamath Falls, Pendleton, Portland and Salem AAUW branches. Grants are combined with units from other states to provide a stipend of about $2,000 for each woman. Grant holders each receive the same amount of spending money, living expenses and an additional $80 monthly for incidental expenses.

Men Bring Home Bacon Cook It, Survey Reveals

By GAY PAULEY
United Press Correspondent

New York—(U.P.)—American men not only are bringing home the bacon, but in increasing numbers are helping to cook it. What's more, some of them are developing kitchen egos as puffy as a soufflé.

A new study on men's role in meal preparation discloses these facts, and also reveals that the masculine willingness to help with dinner ends when dessert is served. The men are as elusive as a wet cake of soap when it's time to do the dishes.

The Borden company, circulated a questionnaire among 1,000 men from all income brackets, of all ages, and from all parts of the country. All but a baker's dozen of the men were married.

Of the 700 who answered, 71 per cent said they cook at one time or another. Eighty per cent help with the grocery shopping.

One of the questions was, "Do you believe men can cook as well as women?" Seventy-three per cent said yes. Twenty-six per cent considered themselves better cooks.

But most of the men still like their wives cooking—any quips to the contrary.

"A few of the men report they occasionally help with the dishes," said Mary Murphy, who directed the study. "But we found most of them do a fade-out when it's clean up time."

None of the men admitted to doing all the cooking. Some cooked "only when my wife is ill" or "when we have guests." Others prepared "Sunday breakfast, when I usually feature pancakes," or cooked "as a surprise," or "when I feel like it."

Sixty-four per cent said most of their cooking was of the outdoors type, at barbecue pit or charcoal grill.

Only 19 per cent always followed recipes. Sixty per cent liked to improvise. Most of them said they didn't follow a strict food budget, and confessed to a weakness for fancy groceries.

One of the questions concerned the types of food the men preferred to cook. Meats were named by 79 per cent. Other preferences were for eggs, barbecue, salads, fish, soups, game and desserts. Sauces and casseroles came last.

Many of the men listed foreign dishes as their specialty. One man named pies.
