Help Yourself to Happiness

Readers are invited to present their problems. All queries will receive individual attention and should be accompanied by a stamped, self-addressed envelope, directed to MARY HARRIS SEIFERT, M.A., Department of Education, The AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF FAMILY RELATIONS, 1287 Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles 27, California.

"What are my chances for a successful marriage? How do I know that my marriage will be successful and happy?"

This question is asked repeatedly of us at the American Institute of Family Relations in Los Angeles. Again and again we hear this query from the clients who come to us preparing for marriage. Dr. Paul Popenoe maintains that the following ten background factors are important in determining marital happiness:

1. Your parents should have been happily married. It is true, then you have a good chance of also finding marital happiness.
2. If you have had a happy childhood, this is a point in your favor.
3. You should not have had any serious conflicts with your mother or your father.
4. In your home life the discipline should have been firm but not harsh.
5. You should have been close to your mother.
6. You should also have been close friends with your father.
7. You should not have had any serious conflicts with your father.
8. Your chances of marital happiness are greater if your parents were frank in their discussion of sex with you.
9. You should have been active in several church and community organizations.
10. Your own attitudes towards sex must be free from disgust or aversion.

If you can answer yes to each of the above statements, then you may consider yourself a better than average risk for marriage. The chances are that your marriage, too, will be happy. Studies indicate that your marriage depends, to a large extent, upon what you bring into the marriage with you from your childhood. If your parents were happy, you tend to be happy. If you were not close to your parents, you tend not to be close to your marital partner or your children. If you have been friends with your family and are still friends with them, you may feel that you can be a more sympathetic and friendly partner with your spouse.

If your childhood has been largely happy without too many obstacles to overcome, it means that you will have a calmer understanding of yourself, of other people, and of life in general, because your past life influences your present behavior and your future relationships with other people. If, however, your parents were not happily married, this does not mean that you will fail in your marriage. It merely means that you must work harder to overcome your past experiences and to be ready for a happy future.

If you find that there are many things mentioned above which have left you puzzled or which you are unable to answer satisfactorily, then you may wish to consult a marriage counselor before you marry. Marriage counseling is not restricted to aiding those already married, but is also devoted to helping those who are planning marriage. Here at the American Institute of Family Relations we counsel people who have been long married or who are planning marriage. We have a marriage readiness course which we offer for all those who wish to prepare themselves for happiness after marriage.
