Time Confusing In Many Sections Today

It's that time again, but just what time it is in many parts of the nation is a little hazy.

Daylight time ended in several western and midwestern states Sunday but in some areas the clocks will not be turned back until the end of the month.

In Indiana only scattered communities made the change, leaving a complex and confusing crazy quilt pattern across the state.

Communities in the Hoosier state as far north as Williamsport and as far south as Evansville moved their clocks back. Other areas, some in the same counties, will change Oct. 28.

In Warren county, for example Williamsport changed to central time but nearby West Lebanon and Pine Village did not.

In Jackson county, the town of Seymour switched last weekend but neighboring Brownsville and Crothersville remain on daylight time until November.

Illinois was also split, with the capital at Springfield and most of the south and central portions of the state making the change. Chicago and other northern areas remain on daylight time until Oct. 28.

"Among the western states that made the change this week end were California and Nevada.

Four Jackson County Students at Linfield. Attending Linfield college, McMinnville, this fall are four students from Jackson county.

Enrolled for their freshmen year are Melvin Harsh, route 2, Central Point; Sylvia Teeter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. K. B. Teeter, 1202 East Main st., Medford; and Jim Crawford, son of Mrs. J. H. Crawford, 531 Berrydale ave., also Medford.

Also attending the college is Kay Kelley, son of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Kelley, 315 North Fifth st., Central Point, who is a sophomore majoring in science.

Two Hearings Tentatively Set On Air Service

The future pattern of air service in the West, involving seven airlines and dozens of route applications in eight states will be decided by two hearings tentatively set for Dec 10 and Jan. 23. West Coast Airlines has been notified.
