

Sen. Neuberger Discusses Problem of Encouraging Citizenship Among Youth

By SEN. RICHARD NEUBERGER

Portland — (Special) — Look Magazine for Oct. 2 published an article declaring: "A very large number of our young voters plainly don't care one way or another about the coming Presidential election, or are so confused that it amounts almost to the same thing." The article was based on a survey among 1,300 students at 24 colleges.

I doubt if things are as gloomy as the Look presentation depicts, but I believe emphatically that the next generation of Americans must be well prepared for citizenship. As Maurice and I have from time to time reported to readers of "Washington Calling," we try to help stimulate Oregon young people's interest in participation in public affairs by appointments of my student interns from Oregon colleges, by sacrificing other Senate patronage so as to have the right to name a Senate page from Oregon, and by using occasional speaking and writing fees to give scholarships in Oregon colleges to encourage careers in government.

Starts Earlier

But preparation for citizenship starts even earlier, at the high-school level. In Central Oregon I encountered two high schools, in Bend and Madras, which closed their platforms to political figures as speakers. I also encountered two other schools, in Redmond and Crook County (Prineville), which welcomed a Senator on the rostrum. At both these places, the students asked me questions for nearly an hour—intelligent questions, searching questions, thoughtful questions.

Now, let me ask a question of my own—how can we best combat apathy and indifference to government among young people—by insulating them from government and politics, or by encouraging their participation?

Let us not forget that the nation where young men and women are denied public discussion of both sides of issues of public policy is Russia—let us in this country introduce our future voters early to their responsibility of judging for themselves the conflicting points of view presented in the continuing public debate, which is the essence of our democratic process.

Obligation to Future

When I talked about conservation to the Western Rod & Reel Club in Portland, I was honored with a life membership in this fine organization. On the back of my card is this statement: "I give my pledge as an American to save and faithfully defend from waste the natural resources of my country—its soil and minerals, its forests, waters and wildlife."

After our experience with Mr. McKay's tenure as Secretary of the Interior, perhaps we should require that all future heads of that great Federal department subscribe to the pledge of the Western Rod & Reel Club. Perhaps future Secretaries would recall such a pledge, before surrendering our wildlife refuges for oil drilling, before proposing the flooding of a National Monument or the construction of dams and reservoirs where they would imperil the elk herds and wilderness solitudes of the Clearwater Basin, before sanctioning special procedures to turn over hundreds of acres of national forest to the Al Sarena mining claimants!

Alaska's Daylight Is Confusing to Student

Fairbanks — (U.P.) — Alaska's 22 hours of summer daylight can be confusing at times, as a summer session student at the University of Alaska discovered. The student ate dinner, then returned to his dormitory to take a nap. He slept soundly and when he awoke his watch said it was 7:30.

He dressed hurriedly, shaved and rushed to the cafeteria believing he'd be just in time for breakfast.

The cafeteria had finished serving when he arrived, but the waitress said she would warm up something for the student. "What's on the menu?" he asked.

"Turkey," she replied. "Good grief," said the student, "I don't want turkey for breakfast."

"This, sir, is not breakfast," the waitress announced. "And unless you have a twin brother, you had your dinner just three hours ago."

Defense Calls Final Brink's Witnesses

Boston — (U.P.) — The defense calls final witnesses today in an attempt to bolster alibis of eight men accused of the million-dollar Brink's robbery.

Defense lawyers Tuesday attacked star government witness Joseph O'Keefe, bandit informer who told how he led masked bandits into Brink's Inc. six years ago.

The defense described O'Keefe as a cheap hoodlum whose convictions included gun carrying, armed robbery and theft.

DOVE SHOWS WAY

Butte City, Calif. — (U.P.) — Robert Dillard lost his checkbook and wallet while hunting early last week. Last week end Dillard's uncle, Andrew Dillard, shot a dove in the same area. The bird fell next to his nephew's wallet and checkbook.
