Republican Truth Squad Approaches Nosedive at Rally

Seattle—(U.P.)—The Republicans' flying truth squad came close to taking a nosedive last night when Sen. Karl E. Mundt of South Dakota left the news conference.

The truth squad came here close on the heels of Adlai Stevenson for the purpose of "correcting" any "erroneous" statements the Democratic presidential nominee might make in his address at a Seattle rally.

One member of the GOP squad, Sen. William A. Purtell of Connecticut didn't even show up. A press representative said he was in his hotel room "popped out."

Another member of the group, Rep. Donald L. Jackson left the squad because of illness and was reported to have gone to his home in California.

Television Appearance Sen. Arthur V. Watkins of Utah, who joined the squad a few hours before it arrived here, was the only member left after Mundt was whisked off to make a television appearance.

Watkins admitted that he was "pretty green" at the job but he bravely tried to carry on when the irate reporters threatened to walk out.

He contended that Stevenson "should be required to present a bill of particulars" in connection with the Democrat's statement which Watkins said implied that President Eisenhower was not spending enough time at his job.

A Nichol's Worth of... Comment On This and That

By HARMAN W. NICHOLS United Press Feature Writer

Washington—(U.P.)—We were sitting there chatting about blue-eyed lassies and male songbirds from old Ireland, when Ted Mack said:

"Do you have a cigarette, Nick?" I hauled out a sack of rollin' tobacco, which I hoard for emergencies, and fished one out.

Ted, the head man of the Amateur Hour on TV, opened the bag, and while rocking rolled a "Mack-made" cigarette that looked like something tailor-made, closed the strings with his teeth professional-like, and pocketed my makin'.

"Wait a tobacco-rollin' minute," I protested. "That thar was a souvenir of a day long past. About the only thing a man can buy for a nickel any more." Then Ted changed the subject and said "Let's look at some of these kids we found in Ireland. They're going to be the whole show Sunday night on the amateur show. The "kids" were, too.

More To Come The State Department has complimented a job-well-done in the business of hands across the sea. So now Ted is working on future shows, bringing the best of class from Israel, Spain, and Mexico—and so on.

Before lunch, Ted said he wanted me to meet some of the folks his agents found in old Eire.

all the way over from Dublin. She said there could be no replacement and she was to sing something called "By The Green Banks," an Irish ballad.

George Boyle, likewise of Dublin, is a ventriloquist. He juggled along three dummies, which he called "figures," in the Irish manner, and which he made with is own hands.

Just For Laughs Thomas Barry, another Dublinite, was the Irish version of comedy. He had the wit and the gift for it. He bounced about and made like, in two or three languages, that he was calling his girl for a date on a Saturday night.

In a sort of pre-view of the show that came later, were the Sun Spots; Patrick Henry Archdale Ellison, Brian Myles Williams, and Donald Leslie Keegan. These three, equipped with two guitars and three blending male voices, did a combination of rock and roll. I suppose that's what they did.

Michael Ryan, of Limerick, said he was a "pork butcher." He said he learned to make music himself with spoons.

"I sort of rattle across my own bones with these spoons," he said. "I learned how to do it when I was in the Irish army. You can learn a lot in the kitchen when you are trying to get away from, what you call it? KP?"

Salem—(U.P.)—Final preparations were complete today for the first hearing of the State Water Resources board in Roseburg, Oct. 15-16.

Board Chairman H. E. Maxey said his group and the Douglas county water resources advisory committee would make a two-day inspection trip of the Umpqua basin Oct. 13-14 to get acquainted with the area's water problems.

Maxey said a hearing was necessary to arrive at methods of conserving and augmenting the water resources of the basin. He said the hearing should bring out a forecast of future requirements on which a water use program could be formulated in accordance with standards set up by the Legislature.
