

PTA Congress Board Takes Action on Ballot Measures

Action on various pieces of legislation was taken by the Oregon Congress of Parents and Teachers Board of Managers at a recent meeting in Portland.

The board favored increasing the basic school support fund to provide 50 per cent of the operational costs of the schools; approved the state recreation bill as written; favored changes in the rural school law which would embrace some type of county tax equalization and change the county superintendent's office from elective to an appointive position; favored state emergency assistance for capital outlay for school buildings; recommended the bill changing the annual school meeting date from the third Monday in June to the first Monday in May; favored Ballot No. 2 to change the state constitution to empower the state to receive, hold, and dispose of stocks, bonds, and other securities; endorsed the home safety program bill and favored enabling legislation for school district reorganization.

Further study will be done by the legislation committee on school bus driver training and examination before recommendations are made.

Mrs. Clyde Gideon, Portland, legislation chairman for the Oregon Congress of Parents and Teachers, is planning a two-day conference of Council legislation chairmen to be held in Salem the early part of January.

Mrs. Myrl L. McKee, Portland, is the new co-chairman of publicity for the Oregon Congress of Parents and Teachers. Mrs. Ross Doty, Eugene, has resigned as juvenile protection chairman. Final arrangements were made for the leadership training workshops being held this month and next throughout the state by Mrs. Ellen Dell Bieler, Western Springs, Illinois, field representative of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers. She also conducted a training session for members of the Oregon Congress Board of Managers during the meeting.

Cheese Production And Consumption Increases in U.S.

Proof that we are becoming increasingly a nation of cheese eaters is given by Paul S. Willis, president of Grocery Manufacturers of America, in a statement that cheese production is showing steady gains. Estimated consumption is over 1,370,000,000 pounds for 1935, almost twice the 1935-39 figure. The tremendous increase in population since pre-war, plus a per capita consumption rise of 35 per cent over that period have both contributed to this growth.

Considering its present popularity, it is rather surprising that all the cheese in America was made on the farm until 1850. The first factory was started by Jesse Williams in Oneida county, New York State in 1851, and from then on the number of small plants grew.

Over the years much cheese was also imported from Europe, until World War II when these imports were discontinued. This gave the incentive to cheese makers in the United States to produce the foreign type cheeses. Before long they proved that they could make any cheese made from the milk of cows. Today this country is not only the largest cheese-producing nation in the world, but its volume is very nearly one-third of the world's production.

Besides the many kinds of imported and domestic "natural" cheese, the process variety has been available to us commercially since 1895. The application of heat to a natural cheese is much the same as the principle used in processing. It is a blending of one or more kinds of natural cheese, non-fat dry milk solids, flavorings, and an emulsifying agent. The keeping quality of the finished product is excellent, the flavor controlled and there is neither rind nor waste. Pasteurizing of the blended cheese during processing "fixes" the flavor so that it will remain the same for several months in the unopened package.

Proof that cheese appeals to all ages is revealed by a survey at a children's boarding school showing that when it was served at least three times a week for six months, many of the children ate more than the regular portion, and showed no signs of tiring of the cheese during the entire test period.

California and Nevada have about 95 per cent of the earthquakes in the United States.

Be Discreetly Jealous

"I'm jealous," admits Mrs. T. "Whenever John looks too long at the girls on the beach, it infuriates me. I get mad, and let him know it!"

"Bob used to tell me everything about the office," says Mrs. B. "until I got upset about his mentioning the typists too often. He says if I'm going to be jealous, he won't tell me anything more."

"I'm sure Ken is involved with a woman," writes Mrs. Z. "He has to be away from home a lot, and he seems to prolong his trips and clam up when I ask him what in the world he has been doing. Twice I've called his hotel to check up on him—and he was furious. Now he won't tell me anything. What can I do?"

Of course, Mrs. Z, there is always the possibility that Ken's trips and their length are simply a necessity of his work—as he says. Asking a man, point-blank, if he has played with the matches almost guarantees antagonism and a refusal to answer. What do you expect him to say? — "Yes, I've dated three blondes and loved every minute and dollar of the time?"—Or "No, I've been a good boy and you should not even insinuate such things about me?" Either way, you put him on the defensive and make it necessary for him to face what he will most certainly feel is your dominance of jealousy.

Men hate obvious jealousy. If justified, it makes them feel guilty. If unfounded, it antagonizes them beyond words.

Naturally, women often feel jealous—resentful of men's apparent freedom of movement and fancy. Jealousy is natural, especially if one partner feels a bit insecure or uncertain of her own worth. But flaunting jealousy can be an extremely dangerous procedure between husband and wife, leading eventually to actualities which might not otherwise exist.

"I never stepped out," declares Bill, "until Ann kept insisting I was playing fast and loose. She drove me wild with her continual suspicions. Finally I decided I might as well have the game as the name, so I gave her something to be jealous about!"

If you must be jealous — and almost everyone is at one time or another — be discreetly so. Evaluate your situation honestly, and nine times out of ten you will find that there is no real need for disturbance, that fancies pass and irregularities return to normal—if you yourself have not created irreparable damage with jealousy. Look carefully at yourself and your home; how can you improve them so that your mate will prefer them to all others? Constructive jealousy can often help you become the person your mate desires. Jealousy indeed has a place in human behavior, but it must be rational, well-considered, and discreet!

Central Point PTA Conducts Contest; Winners Honored

Central Point—A membership contest conducted by Central Point Parent-Teacher association in the primary and elementary schools has been ended. Mrs. Feller's third grade room and Mrs. Foote's first grade room tied for first place in the contest.

A part was given for the pupils and teachers of these two rooms last Friday. Mrs. Stanley Parrish and Mrs. C. E. Chamberlain were hostesses.

A total of 437 parents have taken PTA memberships, and although the contest drive has ended, parents are still invited to join the association.
