Tourists Move Hermit Further Into Woods

Bergamo, Italy—(U.P.)—Many years ago Gino Zambelli of the neighboring village of Calozio Corte wanted to become a bicycle racer, but his career lasted barely two hours.

He equipped himself with a racing bike and entered the "tour of Italy," in which champions pedal the length and breadth of the Italian peninsula for fun and glory.

Zambelli crashed into the plate glass window of a store after only two hours in the race. The shame was too much, and Zambelli took to the woods and became a hermit.

But Zambelli had failed again. A group of tourists found him in the mountain cave where he had lived for years alone with his dogs living on what he could find in the woods.

Zambelli moved farther back into the mountains today in search of his lost solitude.

Philadelphia Has Seven Alarm Fire

Philadelphia—(U.P.)—A seven alarm fire in industrialized northeast Philadelphia destroyed one building and damaged several others early today a short distance from the huge Frankford Arsenal.
Scores of firemen from 61 companies and special units fought more than 90 minutes in a driving wind and rainstorm to bring the blaze under control.
The flames wrecked a one-story brick and wood building of the Fogel Refrigerator Co., which occupies the entire block. Another building was badly damaged and several others sustained lesser damage.
The company is adjacent to the main north-south tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad and just a few blocks west of the arsenal.
The fire started in the carpentry shop and touched off the sprinkler system. But it spread throughout the rest of the building and whipped by strong winds, leaped to others.
Fire Chief George Hink said a shift in the wind helped check the flames. Hink said they endangered another building on the Fogel property which contained the paint shop. He said it held large amounts of inflammable solvents and lacquers.
Firemen had to stretch hoses as far away as the arsenal because of a lack of sufficient hydrants in the immediate area.

French School Kids Add Wine To Water

Paris—(U.P.)—The dark days of Pierre Mendes-France are over. French school children can soon give up their milk and go back to spiking their drinking water with good red wine.
The National Assembly's committee on beverages voted overwhelmingly Wednesday to demand that the public schools permit pupils to add wine to their water as they did before Mendes-France was premier.
