

ILLINOIS VALLEY Students Hear Neuberger

By FRANK STRICKLAND

Illinois Valley—Several active Democratic workers were disappointed Tuesday when U.S. Senator Richard L. Neuberger came, unannounced, to Cave Junction where he delivered an address to students at Illinois Valley high school. Subject of the Senator's talk was not learned. Neuberger, who is not a candidate himself, is touring the state in the support of the candidacy of his senatorial colleague Sen. Wayne Morse. Workers who wanted to see the Senator regretted having missed the opportunity.

While many truckloads of logs are seen on the roads here every day, logging operations in this immediate vicinity has reached an all-time low because of the scarcity of accessible trees. Access roads are planned to penetrate isolated stands of virgin forest which, when completed, will increase the log output from this southwestern section of the state.

Our fall weather (so far) would make Santa Barbara and San Diego, California turn green with envy. Refreshing rains are followed by warm sunshine. Since the break in Oregon's driest summer, Oct. 9, new areas of green vegetation have appeared since the first fall rain and some flowers and trees have bloomed for the second time this year.

There is scarcely a known way to subject animals and small pets to unnecessary abuse, pain and agonizing death, which the human race is not guilty of. Man, who sets himself up as kingpin of the universe, will keep his affectionate dog chained to a tree without proper care or exercise for the animal's entire lifetime. He is so calloused in mind and heart he'll dump unwanted pets on the roadside without untying the bag so the innocent and bewildered creatures will have a fighter's chance to survive. I saw a man shoot his faithful hunting dog at the close of the hunting season because he was leaving and wouldn't "need him any more."

All because he is kingpin of the universe, the bully likes to be master and lord over defenseless animals.

Home made pies sold here on the auction block last week for as much as seven dollars each at a pie social held by the Democratic club of the Illinois Valley.

The cleverly-decorated pastry grossed around $90, which club members thought little in comparison to the average take at similar occasions in the good old Democratic days when the aromatic goodies brought as much as $100 each. Candidate Charles O. Porter and Mrs. Porter drove from their home in Eugene to attend the social where Porter was principal speaker. The address of the congressional candidate who discussed vital election issues, was followed by informal talks by Josephine county candidates Clifford J. Driscoll, Neal Mesman and Bruce E. Davidson, who are running on the Democratic ticket for state representative, county judge and county commissioner respectively.

Not down in your scrap book a note about three modest unassuming, Cave Junction women who have departed from the usual housewife duties to engage in activities not too often followed by the weaker sex. Junita Hassler, employee of Libby McNeal and Libby Packing Co., Anchorage, Alaska, flies down from the far north to attend Mrs. Nettie Sewell's Golden Eagle service station at Cave Junction while her aunt Nettie stalks mule deer in the mountain vastness of Eastern Ore. Junita's mother, Mrs. Cora Bell Masoner, is employed, in season, by the Oregon Caves Co., and also pinches around the station. Mrs. Sewell, a former southern Oregon logger, does minor automobile repairs, drains crank cases, changes wheels and fixes flats when she's not overhauling the motor of her own car. Miss Hassler plans to return to Alaska soon. Mrs. Sewell returned from

On The Side

The Hague — As previously stated we are frequently in receipt of complaints from subscribers that our Horses and Women department pays too much attention to women and too little to horses. I took care of that situation by a visit to a report on the activities at the Duindigt race course in this city. Now we can return to further consideration of the subject of women. My first impression of the feminine portion of the local population was erroneous. I said a good looking female was a rarity here. On further study I find there are many beautiful women in The Hague but you can't tell it at first glance because of the clothes they wear, the hair-dos they feature and their refusal to use make-up. A little sound advice from a clothes stylist, a going over by a clever hairdresser plus some aid from a make-up expert and many of the young women would step far up in the glamour girl class. Especially the blondes. There might even be some film star material here. By the way there have been a girl of Dutch birth who has made an outstanding hit in Hollywood? Offhand I can't remember one.

Best way to drink Dutch gin is undiluted. It should be sipped. So I was advised by a Holland newspaperman. I took his word for it. I didn't try it. I can't forget the time in Mexico City that I tried the native drink of tequila. I felt as if I had swallowed a red hot poker.

We dined in elegance last night at a restaurant on Embassy Row in The Hague. The service was superb. The food excellent. There was everything on the menu from caviar to crepe suzette. The atmosphere was reminiscent of the old Ritz-Carlton in Manhattan and the Plaza hotel Oak Room in the days of their glory. The check was so reasonable it was a pleasure to pick it up. In fact, I enjoyed looking at it. The cost of the dinner for two was about one-fourth what you would have to pay in a similar class restaurant in New York. As I said before, getting such bargains is one of the fascinations of foreign travel.

The growing and sale of tulip bulbs continues to be one of Holland's leading industries. Tulips were first brought into Holland from Turkey in the 16th century. . . . The current attraction at the largest cinema theatre in The Hague is according to the sign on the marquee "De Man in Het Donkergeruz Pak Met Gregory Peck."

Most of the Dutch girls seen agreed a married woman's place is in the home. Career women wives are much in the minority in The Netherlands. Eighty per cent of Dutch wives devote all their time to taking care of house, husband and children. There is an acute shortage of feminine help in The Netherlands. The manufacturers and business men constantly offer all kinds of inducements to persuade wives to take jobs outside the home. They are not having much success.

Other guests present from the Grants Pass Post No. 2302 Auxiliary were Mrs. Mary Hale, Mrs. Jewell Feagan and Mrs. Wiley Shores. The charter was draped at this meeting in memory of Sister Pat Close, who passed away in Roseburg Monday, Oct. 8. Serving refreshments were Mrs. Grant Hubbard and Mrs. Gene House. The Auxiliary will take part in the Halloween party for the Veterans at Camp White, and Friday, Oct. 26, will be the regular visiting to the domiciliary.

Newcomers to Trail are Mr. and Mrs. Clifford E. Sikes, of Sacramento, Calif., who have bought the 160 acre Davis ranch adjoining the Tiller-Trail highway, three miles west of Trail. The Sikes who are living on the ranch now, have two children. Randall in the sixth grade and Sharon in the third grade at Elk-Trail school. Sikes is a construction contractor, and at the present time has his equipment on a road building job.
