The Hague — Our Horses and Women department is constantly in receipt of complaints that too much space is devoted to women and too little to horses. Not wishing this European report to be subject to such a complaint I attended the races at the Duindigt track in the suburbs of The Hague. This is a beautiful mile and one half course on which both running and harness races are staged. The harness horses race on a special dirt track, the runners on a turf track. The day I attended there were six harness races and one running race.

Details
The admission to Duindigt is about 78 cents for men and half that for women. There are no other charges. The course is very large and well kept but the stands are small. The pari-mutuel system of wagering prevails. Tickets are sold off a rack. Some of the mutuel clerks are women. The wagering unit is a little more than a guilder, about 30 cents. Betting only for straight and place. A special type of betting is called "The Koppel." That's too complicated to explain. I decided to become a two and one half guilder bettor.

Breeding
The harness horses were mostly of American ancestry. Such names as Hanover, Volo and Spencer were prominent in the breeding. The runners had good breeding lines, mostly British. There was no starting gate used. Was no race caller. Races were run in silence. The fans did no cheering. Not even at the finish. At the end of the race the winner was applauded with hand clapping.

Handicapping
For the first race, a harness event, I was handicapped with the difficulty of understanding the money and the manner of placing the bet. So I lost. Then I bought a Dutch racing paper and was soon studying the starters intelligently. I speak only English but I can read a racing form in any language. After that I practically swept the card. Had four winners in the five remaining races we stayed for. I got back all the money I lost betting on those wooden horses on the ship.

Art
What had you accomplished by the time you reached the age of 26? About all I could point to with pride was that in my last year at college I batted fourth on the ball team and had a batting average of .382. When Rembrandt was 26 he painted that masterpiece known as "The Anatomy Lesson." The complete title of this painting is "The Anatomy Lesson of Professor Nicolaus Pieterszoon Tulp." It was painted by request of the Amsterdam Medical association. Many consider it Rembrandt's best work. In any event it is the painting that first made him famous.

Dodgers
Brooklyn once had more trolley cars than any other city in the world. The natives were nicknamed "Trolley Dodgers." That's how the Brooklyn ball club was nicknamed the "Dodgers." I was brought up in Brooklyn. Have always considered myself an accomplished traffic dodger. However, this Holland traffic baffles me. It is a quadruple threat: automobiles, bicycles, buses and trolley cars. All constantly moving at top speed. The cyclists are the worst menace. Their favorite sport seems to be making pedestrians jump. They are certainly having a lot of fun with me.

Namesake
Brooklyn, New York and the 13 other Brooklyns in the U.S.A. are named after Breukelen in Holland. This town is only 20 miles from Amsterdam. I will visit it and report my findings for the benefit of our many subscribers who are residents of the beautiful borough across the bridge.

NO MORE SHOOTING
Boston—(UP)—Any Rhode Islander crossing the state line into Massachusetts could have been shot on sight until a few months ago. One of the "blue laws," recently repealed by the state legislature, set down the ruling during the colonial period.
