Young French Author Talks Gaily About Own Love Affair

By GAY PAULEY
United Press Correspondent
New York —(UPI)—Francoise Sagan, the young French girl who writes of love with sadness, talks about it with gaiety.

The 21-year-old novelist confessed to today that she is head over heels in amour right now. "Who doesn't have a sentimental story?" said Miss Sagan, who answers questions with questions. "Will I marry him? I don't know... probably not."

"Who is he... I cannot tell you, other than that he is a Frenchman."

If the current heart interest meets the description Miss Sagan gave of her "ideal" man, he is "intelligent, stronger than I. Older and not necessarily handsome."

Miss Sagan, an elf in stature, has become some sort of giant in the literary world with her first and second novels, both best sellers. Her first, "Bonjour Tristesse," was published when she was 18. It told the tragic story of a girl who was responsible for the death of her father's fiancée.

Miss Sagan was a student at the Sorbonne and had just flunked her examinations. The book was written while she noped.

Record Printing Her second, "A Certain Smile," had an initial printing in the United States of 100,000 copies, which broke a 30-year-old record at the publishing company. It tells the story of a young girl in love with an older man, married.

Both books will be made into movies. The novelist denied that her books are "immoral"; she said they are merely the telling of certain events in peoples' lives and that "morality is not the question."

This is Miss Sagan's second visit to New York. She will be here for 15 days to consult with her publisher about a third novel, plot not yet decided, to "walk, walk and walk... to visit night clubs, the smaller ones... and to shop a little."

"Success has its good and bad," she said in an interview. "But of course, the good wins." She listed some of the "good." "I am free. I have more money. An apartment all my own, which I now am giving up. I want to move to the country to work. "And, no more school!"

Her success has brought her enough money to afford a couple of cars—but only one racing car. "I'm not nearly as much of a sports car fan, as a lot of people say," she explained. Enough wealth to wear Dior clothes and own a mink coat if she wants it. "I bought leopard," she said. "Mother said I wasn't the mink type."

Miss Sagan said the "bad" part of success was "no more time for myself... always the telephone ringing. I do not like being a celebrity."

"In France, people do not like success, as they do in America," she said. "Success in France is proof you're not really a writer."

Enjoy plentiful pears often in salads. Top pear halves with shredded cheese, with whole cranberry sauce, peanut butter, minced chicken, crabmeat or shrimp. Pass a tart dressing.

Hostesses will be Mrs. George Bourne, Mrs. Ernest James and Mrs. A. N. Construk.

Members of the club not contacted by the committee are to take a salad, vegetable or dessert, and table service.
