The Medical Roundup

People With Queer Ideas It is remarkable how many people there are who get queer ideas, and then in spite of everything they may hear of every thing they may hear of the contrary, I just saw the prospect of a book by a man who is sure that aluminum pots are very dangerous to the health of users. If, before writing, he had phoned to his physician or his druggist he would have learned that today the common drug used for the treatment of ulcer is a preparation of aluminum. Every year each patient with ulcer swallows several pounds of the powdered material. As anyone can easily see, the amount of aluminum one can get off a pot during cooking might not be visible if placed on the head of a pin. Obviously, that amount or a thousands times that amount cannot possibly do any harm.

Health officials of the United States Government have pointed out again and again that there is nothing to this silly idea, but still it lives on lustily, and one hears of it wherever one goes. New Drugs Being Tested There is a fish of fighting Siamese small fish that are constantly going after each other. When a small amount of one of the new tranquilizing drugs is dropped into their tank, they calm down and behave themselves. This reaction provides a simple, cheap and quick method of picking out a tranquilizer from a group of drugs that have been synthesized.

I read now that guppies can be used in testing drugs. As Drs. Doris L. Keller and Wayne M. Umbreit recently reported, the fish can be placed first in water which contains a trace of lysergic acid diethylamide, a substance which can cause volunteers who take it to be psychotic for a few hours. This causes the fish to keep swimming against the wall of the container in a peculiar "vibrating" way. This type of behavior can be stopped by adding a tranquilizing drug to the water. Later, when given more of the lysergic acid, the fish swim backward.

The effects of other drugs on

It's a Federal case if you try to smuggle a bear out of Crater Lake National Park.

It's almost as bad for trying to smuggle one into the park so give this some thought before you try it.
