

Rebellious East German Students Criticize Youth Organization

Action Similar To Move Preceding Hungarian Revolt

Berlin—U.P.—Rebellious East German students strongly criticized the zone's Communist youth organization today and demanded an end to the compulsory study of Russian language.

It was the same type of student criticism that preceded the Hungarian nationalist uprising last week.

Want Own Organizations
Students encouraged by the Hungarian revolt demanded the right to withdraw from the "Free German Youth" organization and set up their own student organizations.

The demands were disclosed by the Communists themselves. In an effort to prevent open demonstrations, the Communists threatened the students with punishment but made some concessions and promises.

The Communist reaction indicated the seriousness with which the situation was viewed by the East German government.

Attempt To Split Youths
Students demanded the right to withdraw from the only youth organization permitted in schools and colleges, but Alfred Neumann, first secretary of the East Berlin branch of the Communist party, rejected the demands as an attempt to split the youth movement.

He said they were "an attempt of imperialist forces to split the unity of the youth movement in the German Democratic Republic, particularly in Berlin."

Students at East Berlin's Humboldt University led the revolt. Last week, they demanded the ouster of Communist leader Walter Ulbricht.

Fear Indicated
East German Communist leaders have openly indicated fear in the past week that anti-Communist elements in the Soviet zone may attempt to follow in the footsteps of the Hungarian nationalists. Soon after the revolution exploded in Budapest, Communist teams toured East German factories to instruct workers in methods of putting down an armed revolt.

"We reject the formation of student organizations as demanded by some groups who are under the influence of Western organizations," Neumann said today.

Morse Lists Proposals in Mid-East Crisis; McKay Expresses Confidence in Eisenhower

By UNITED PRESS

Trouble in the Middle East claimed the attention of Oregon's leading political figures yesterday as they bore down on their campaigns in the stretch drive.

Sen. Wayne Morse issued a three-point statement on the Middle East crisis last night while his opponent, Douglas McKay, expressed confidence in the leadership of President Eisenhower to keep the United States out of any fighting.

Sen. Morse's three-point proposal included:

"1. Preferably, the Congress should be called into special session, or at least the Armed Services and Foreign Relations committees of both houses should be convened at once."

"2. The great prestige of the office of the Presidency should be used, through a speech by the President before the United Nations general assembly, in appealing to the world for united support in calling upon Great Britain, France, Egypt and Israel to cease their military actions at once."

"3. The United States, acting through its United Nations delegation, should call for the laying down of a United Nations doctrine similar to the Truman doctrine in the Greece crisis a few years ago, serving clear notice . . . the rest of the world will not countenance aggressive acts in the Middle East."

Upon hearing news of the Anglo-French air attacks on Egypt yesterday, McKay told party workers gathered to hear him speak, "Thank God that we have Dwight Eisenhower in the White House today."

McKay Charges 'Grandstand'
Speaking in Portland yesterday, McKay struck out at his opponent's reference to the Congressional Quarterly in defense of his record.

"The Congressional Quarterly is a private, profit making publication controlled by Democrats . . ." McKay said.

He scored Morse's proposal for a special session of Congress as a "grandstand play."

Morse used a speaking date in Portland yesterday to outline his opposition to partnership power and said such power development policies would mean higher cost power. He called for federal construction of multipurpose dams, private development of "lowhead" dams and pooling of all power in a common pool.

Hatfield-Sweetland Debate
Monroe Sweetland, Democrat, and Mark Hatfield, Republican, candidates for secretary of state, appeared at Portland State college yesterday. Sweetland said he was disappointed that when registration figures showed a Democratic majority in the state Republican candidates for governor and secretary of state dropped all reference to party affiliation from their billboards, ads and campaign literature.

Hatfield said his billboards were up before the figures came out and that he still had reference to his party affiliation in campaign literature.

Gov. Elmo Smith told a group of reclamation leaders in Portland last night he supported the new Water Resources Board and felt that the question of proper use and conservation of water was the most important resource problem facing Oregon.

Two Cows Killed in Separate Accidents
Two cows were struck and killed in two accidents about the same time on Highway 62, yesterday.

State police said a car operated by John Ivan Greb, 18, of Eagle Point, struck a cow about 3 1/2 miles north of Eagle Point on Highway 62. Greb was traveling north and was unable to see the cow because of oncoming traffic until he was too close to stop, police said. The cow was owned by Bill Thomas of Eagle Point.

A Steve Wilson Logging truck struck a cow near California on the Rogue on Highway 62 and killed it, police said. The driver was not identified, police said.

Both accidents occurred about 7 p.m. yesterday.

Four 'Trick-or-Treat' Youngsters Killed When Hit By Auto

By UNITED PRESS

Four children were killed and three others were injured Wednesday night when they were hit by a car while making the traditional Halloween "trick or treat" rounds.

A car driven by Alfonso Hilberg, 25, Brussels, plowed into the group of 10 children just south of this Door county community. Four of the youngsters were killed, three were hospitalized at Algoma, and three escaped injury.

Dead Identified
Sheriff's deputies from Sturgeon Bay identified the dead as Neale Bass, 11; his sister, Jane, 9; Monica Miller, 8; and Steven Landriau, 7. All were from Brussels.

The injured, also from Brussels, are Denise Jandrian, 10; Marcia Miller, 8; and Roger Miller Jr., 8. None of them was critically hurt.

Hilberg said he was driving about 40 to 45 miles an hour along County Highway C and came upon the children at the same time that an approaching car went by. He told authorities he was blinded by the lights of the other car and didn't see the youngsters until it was too late to stop.

By UNITED PRESS
November received a brisk welcome from the traditional Halloween festivities, which were a bit more rowdy than in previous years.

Although most of the nation's youngsters contented themselves with soaping a few windows in the course of their trick-or-treating, others displayed a malicious ingenuity by trying out new twists of old pranks and mischief.

Chicago police said Wednesday night was the wildest Halloween in two years despite a drizzle and the ominous presence of the entire police force. Instead of carving pumpkins several youths threw them at passing cars and buses. Overly ripe tomatoes and eggs were also hurled at passing motorists.

Nixon in All-Out Drive for Votes In Pennsylvania

En Route With Nixon—U.P.—Vice President Richard M. Nixon makes a final all-out drive today for Pennsylvania's 32 electoral votes, regarded by both parties as strategic in the outcome of the election.

Striking out by train for the second time in the campaign, Nixon scheduled six speeches today and six more Friday in an all-out bid to keep Pennsylvania in President Eisenhower's column.

Ranked High by Demos
Democrats rank Pennsylvania high on the list of states they think they need to install Adlai E. Stevenson in the White House.

Nixon invaded Pennsylvania after stumping New York City in the rain, Wednesday night. The three rallies wound up his campaign efforts in New York. In a speech in the heart of the big Negro district of Harlem, Nixon attempted to woo the Negro vote into the Eisenhower camp by outlining the administration's record on civil rights.

Monticello, Ind.—U.P.—Ivan Nah Dictator Peggy, a registered Holstein, gave birth to a bull calf at the White County 4-H fairgrounds. Two hours before judges declared her grand champion of her breed.

Nixon also kept up a running attack on Stevenson's criticism of administration policy in the Middle East where fighting has broken out between Israel and Egypt.

Nixon told a cheering Queens rally that Stevenson was a "patriotic Hamlet strolling off the political stage."

"To be or not to be is the question for him and I can assure you he's not to be president of the United States," Nixon said.
