Salem Boy Faces Rare Operation To Correct Ailment

Salem— (U.P.) —A 16-year-old Salem boy faces a rare heart operation later this month to correct a heart ailment which left him a "blue baby."

Young Harvey K. Thurwell Jr. will depend for his life on a mechanical heart, a mechanical lung, a team of 10 doctors and 20 pints of unusual O-negative type blood when he is operated on in Seattle Nov. 28.

Dr. K. Alvin Merendino, professor of surgery at the University of Washington, will lead the medical team in substituting a short section of plastic tubing for a part of the heart which has failed to match the boy's physical growth.

Blood Donors Sought

Salem donors were being lined up to donate the blood Nov. 27, which will then be flown to Seattle. The surgery requires that the blood be no older than 48 hours and suspended in a special solution.

At the age of six, Harvey underwent another rare heart operation which rechanneled the main artery from his left arm back into his heart to boost the oxygen content of his blood.

He was able to attend school until two years ago but recently his activity has been limited by the heart condition.

Eugene Firm Low Aerial Photo Bidder

An offer of $7,551 by Western Aerial Contractors, Eugene, was low among four bidders last week when the bids were opened by the Portland District, Corps of Engineers, for 2140 flight-line miles of vertical aerial photographic negatives of the Rogue, Coquille, and Umpqua rivers.

An evaluation of flood damages and preparation of survey reports on possible projects in these three river basins will be made from the photographs.
