Oregonians Complete Last Minute Plans for Holiday Observance

By UNITED PRESS
Housewives hurried to markets, football fans made last minute efforts to get seats on the 50-yard line and children could not keep their minds on text books today as Oregon planned for its Thanksgiving day observance.

Special services of Thanksgiving were planned in some communities while ski enthusiasts polished their equipment and dad put another quart of antifreeze in the family car in anticipation of activities planned for tomorrow.

Residents of the state have a menu of activities scheduled for the day that should satisfy the most discriminating of tastes. Topping the list of attractions for the day is the Oregon-Oregon State football game at Corvallis. The Beavers, Rose Bowl bound, host the Ducks in spacious Parker stadium in the 60th renewal of the intra-state rivalry.

And should father desire, he can stay in his living room and witness the classic. The "Civil War" will be beamed by television into homes throughout the western half of the nation.

The day is expected to dawn clear and cold across most of Oregon with temperatures dropping below freezing in most areas tonight. While much of the nation shoveled its way out of snow drifts, Oregon residents simply put on their ear muffs and enjoyed a chilly winter sun. Highway traffic was reported to be moving normally across the state's mountain roads today and the forecast indicated that drivers should not encounter too much difficulty over the holiday. Ice was reported on many routes, though, and motorists were advised to use caution.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture reported today that the movement of turkeys in the Portland market was brisk with growers selling at prices ranging from 30 to 35 cents per pound. Oregon cranberries, another traditional item on the Thanksgiving table, also were in demand and were going for about $4.50 per case.

Salem Livestock Man Gets Auction License

Salem — (U.P.) — The State Department of Agriculture has continued the license of Earl Gillaspie, Salem, to operate his livestock auction yard. The action followed hearing held here Oct. 24 on charges that Gillaspie has allowed two untested heifers to be removed from his yard contrary to state law. However, findings indicated there was no evidence to show Gillaspie was aware that the animals were being removed without a test for Bang's disease.

Flashlights, Other Items Are Recovered
Several flashlights and other small articles taken from cars parked at the Oasis ballroom in Eagle Point Saturday have been recovered by sheriff's officials. The articles were located in the possession of several juveniles after reports were received that items were missing from the cars parked in the parking lot there. Items may be claimed at the Eagle Point chief of police's office in the city hall.
