Troop Clubhouse

During recent weeks Troop 156, St. Mary's school, has been fixing a clubhouse for their meetings, in a small building back of the home of the leader, Mrs. Mary Carrara, on Mary street. The members have covered the walls with cardboard to make them smooth, and plans have been made to paper them soon.

The troop held a costume Halloween party and for a surprise Mrs. Carrara's son Ricky brought several of his boy friends to the party. Those attending were Toni Adams, Patricia Calhoun, Dianne DeLorme, Carole Doyle, Mary Jo Batzer, Judy Kirland, Mary Pat Naumes, Carol Valentine, Marilyn Schultz, Bud Carey, Tom Depner, Pat Dumberg, Jim Dupray, Ricky Carrara, Dick Evans, Andre Knutson, Tom Newcomb, Florian Skasky, Bill Smith, John Snider and Marvin Vieckoren. Other guests were Mrs. Carrara, Kay Carrara, and David.

During November the troop made favors for the patients at Sacred Heart hospital. The favors were taken to the hospital by Patricia Calhoun and Marilyn Schultz. The troop also plans to have a booth at the parish bazaar, and are also preparing a float for the annual Christmas parade.

Patricia Calhoun is scribe for Troop 156.

The weasel is one of the world's most savage animals, for its size. Although only about 10 inches long, the weasel hunts its prey by scent and will even fly at the throat of a man.

Girls Who Prefer Dad

Girls who prefer their fathers to their mothers, says a recent survey of some five hundred women students at a dozen mid-western universities, are more likely to get married than are students who are distinctly "mothers' girls."

One might expect to find the opposite of this situation; that girls who prefer their mothers might be more feminine and more romantically inclined. A survey of as many male students revealed that the "mothers' boys" followed the trend of the "mothers' girls"; men who were deeply attached to their mothers were less likely to marry than those who were relatively free of maternal attachments.

Among women, statistics show that a higher proportion of the girls who are married, engaged, or "going steady" love their fathers more than their mothers. These girls believe that they were as children more loved by their fathers than their mothers, and are less inclined to blame their fathers for marital unhappiness.

If a girl has enjoyed a happy relationship with her father throughout her childhood, secure in his care and protection, it is easy for her to transfer this emotional pattern from her father to her husband. Conditioned to a feeling of trust and security, she transfers her feelings of dependency to her mate and looks to him for a continuance and extension of her former happiness and well-being in her new wife-rolle.

On the other hand, men must attain independence if they are to succeed as mature adults, as bread-winners, founders of new family groups, and as successful sexual partners. Apron strings must be not only loosed, but removed. Mothers, unfortunately, often tend to hold too tightly to their growing sons, attempting to continue an outgrown little-boy-and-mother emotional pattern, which has no place in a new marriage. Men who are successful in freeing themselves from their too-deep maternal attachments cannot give themselves wholeheartedly to marriage, because in essence they are setting up a triangle situation with two women — their wives and their mothers.
