Arch Work Returns To Portland Office After Iraq Visit

R. A. (Arch) Work, Portland, head of the water supply forecasting section of the watershed planning branch, U.S. soil conservation service, returned to his office this week after spending several months in Iraq as a watershed consultant.

Work formerly had his headquarters in Medford, but they were moved to Portland about three years ago. He is in charge of snow surveys and water forecasting for most of the western United States.

In a letter received in Medford, Work said: "Valiant Struggle"

"One only need travel far from home, perhaps to areas of the vital Middle East, to get a conception of how fully blessed we Americans are in our God-given heritage of natural resources. Those people in Iraq, through wise use of their oil resources, are making a valiant struggle to recapture some of their watershed assets, but their problems are great indeed. We, here, are in the enviable position, given the wisdom and will to do so, to prevent the ravages which come to watersheds and crop lands severely used for thousands of years."

"My assignment in Iraq was to develop and initiate a snow survey system as a basis of runoff forecasting for management of the two large flood-control and irrigation reservoirs now under construction, and for two additional reservoirs in the planning stage in the Tigris river and its principal tributaries in Iraq. Consequently, most of my time was in the high mountains of Kurdistan, which tower to 10,000 feet or so and receive rather heavy snowfalls."

Work was in the Mid-East on leave from the soil conservation service as a consultant to a private American engineering firm, and went with the consent and support of the U.S. government.

Offices of Seattle Attorney Ransacked

Seattle—(U.P.)—The offices of David A. Meyer, the attorney who is seeking a pardon for Mrs. Violet Sill, were ransacked during the week end, the police department said today.

Officers said three rooms in the suite occupied by Weyer and David Roderick, his law partner, were searched. Police said even sealed mail was opened.

Weyer is seeking a pardon from Gov. Arthur B. Langlie for Mrs. Sill, who was convicted of manslaughter for the slaying of her tavern owner husband, Marion, two years ago. Mrs. Sill is serving a sentence in the state penitentiary at Walla Walla.
