What Makes Johnnie Get out of Hand—And How to Bring Him Back—

"I used to be able to manage Billy, but now since he's going to school, he won't mind at all." "Eleven year old Tommy squirms if we hug him and acts as if he didn't like us anymore at all—And he used to be so affectionate!"

"Bobbie shows off when there is company and embarrasses us terribly. Recently I tried treating him like an adult in the group and made a great show of a proper introduction. Bobbie behaved beautifully and surprised us all!"

Children outgrow not only clothes but also ways of managing them. Discipline which worked at four is often useless at six, and definitely outmoded at ten. Rewards which worked wonders at five are scorned at twelve. Children grow, and so should their methods of treatment grow with them. Parents must be alert to these changes from month to month, from year to year, from crisis to crisis.

Parents should try earnestly to understand the feelings and needs of growing children, their desire to be treated like maturing individuals. Mothers especially often continue to regard their youngsters as preschoolers long after the toddler age has passed. Antagonisms planted in childhood may last throughout life, coloring maturity and later life in marriage and professional situations.

A child should be treated fairly and consistently. If he is given an explanation of why things are wanted of him or forbidden to him, he is far more willing to abide by rules than if forced or nagged into compliance. Good discipline is in reality teaching and learning, not forcing and punishment. This the wise parent knows. Parents who use praise generously and show appreciation often succeed in guiding their offspring far more skillfully than those who threaten, "I'll tan you if you don't do as I say!"

When Johnnie is helped to feel self-confident and happy with himself, he will be less of a problem than if he is made to feel he is "bad". Try to understand how Johnnie feels, what he really wants and needs—and then help him to feel confident in your affection and in his own worth. If Johnnie likes himself and knows that you, too, like him, many of his problems will disappear.

Wayne Angell, outstanding nineteen year old violinist and native of Klamath Falls, will perform at Southern Oregon college on Sunday, December 2, at 3:30 p.m. in a free concert sponsored by the local chapter of Delta Phi Alpha. The young man, violin winner in a 1955 national contest, has impressed western audiences and critics by the maturity and depth of his musical interpretation as well as by the brilliance of his technique. The Sunday program at Churchill Hall auditorium will co-feature Aurora Underwood, pianist.

Cadillac

Surpasses its Own Great Reputation!

You're looking at a mighty surprised man.

Almost all of his adult life he has owned Cadillac cars. And so, when he came in to see and drive the new 1957 Cadillac, he thought he knew about what to expect.

Well, here he is—barely under way in the city's traffic—and already he is learning the startling truth.

He is learning that nothing could adequately prepare a man for the new "car of cars"—not even Cadillac ownership itself!

He suspected it, in fact, the instant he caught his first glimpse of this newest Cadillac creation. This was an entirely new kind of Cadillac beauty—brilliantly fresh in line and in contour.

And then he opened the door and swung into the driver's seat—and found added evidence all around him. On every side were new miracles of interior beauty and comfort and convenience.

And when he turned the key and put his foot on the accelerator, his sentiment grew to conviction. The car was incredibly nimble and quiet and smooth of ride.

Surprised, did we say? Well, just wait until he hits a stretch of open highway.

That great new engine is incredibly responsive. There is new balance and ease of motion. And the car is so easy to handle that it seems almost to know the road.

No question about it—this is the Cadillac that literally surpasses its own great reputation!

We suggest that you come in soon to see and drive this surprising new Cadillac. It's an experience you shouldn't postpone—and one you'll not soon forget.

You'll be welcome at any time.
