

Local Efforts to Aid Hungarian Refugees Expected to Expand

Local efforts, in addition to those announced at last night's city council meeting to gather supplies and financial aid for relief of Hungarian refugees in Austria and the Middle East have started on a relative small scale and are expected to expand in the next few days, it was indicated today.

St. Peter's Lutheran church in Medford began collecting money for Hungarian relief on Thanksgiving day.

The money will be disbursed through the board of world relief of the Lutheran church, Missouri Synod, according to the Rev. Kenneth Korby, pastor of the church. He said a "considerable sum" has already been collected and a large share of it has been contributed by Sunday school students. Most of the money will be used for food and medicines, he added.

Emergency Tag Day

An emergency "Tag Day" campaign to collect funds on Medford streets Dec. 12 for aid to refugees is also being planned by the Jackson County Red Cross chapter.

Contributions also are being accepted by check or money order payable to Red Cross—Hungarian Relief. They may be mailed to the Red Cross chapter, Jackson County Courthouse, Medford.

The Jackson county chapter of the Oregon United Nations association has also announced it is giving special attention to the relief project. Members of the local UN organization have been asked to solicit contributions of such items as clean, warm clothing for men, women and children, including blankets and diapers for infants.

Contributions may be brought to St. Mark's Episcopal church at the Dec. 13 meeting of the group.

Action by the local UN group was stimulated by a letter from Mrs. W. D. Pearson, Jacksonville. She stated in her letter: "The need of the thousands of new refugees in Austria and the Middle East is appalling. A special appeal for clothing and funds has already been made by the American Friends Service committee, which already has relief centers and personnel functioning in both areas. Friends are also committed to supply clothing to the homeless and needy in Hungary through the International Red Cross and thus far they have no clothing to send as existing supplies on hand prior to the revolution have been exhausted."

She added that the greatest need is for women's and children's clothing, since the majority of Hungarian refugees fall into these classifications.

Beta Sigma Phi

The five local chapters of Beta Sigma Phi social sorority held a special drive for clothing contributions on Saturday, Nov. 24. Members report a large number of clothing items were contributed on that day and are now awaiting shipment. The women will continue to accept contributions for a day or two but indicated they are anxious to send the packages as soon as possible.

Residents on the west side of Medford may take their items to the K. A. Hayes residence, 1012 Mt. Pitt st., and those on the east side may take their contributions to the Nick DeWitt residence, 320 North Keeneway. Shoes and warm clothing are being especially requested, members said.

Sorority members have decided to send the packages to refugees in Austria but have not as yet determined the agency through which they will forward the supplies.

Free Transportation

Pierce Freight Lines, Inc., 795 South Riverside ave., will provide free transportation for contributions along the company's line between San Francisco and Portland. This is in keeping with the company's policy of delivering charity donations anywhere along its line without charge.

Meanwhile, the Medford Seventh Day Adventist church reported word is expected momentarily to signal the start of a congregation-wide drive for contributions. Other church and service organizations are expected to join the drive in the near future.

Among agencies receiving fund contributions for benefit of refugees is the Oregon Committee for Hungarian refugees, box 205, YMCA building, Portland, Ore.

The American Friends Service committee said most all types of clothing are needed as well as are cash contributions to provide funds to send clothing and food overseas. Wilson Hartzler, head of the Portland office of AFSC, said contributions and inquiries may be addressed to American Friends Service committee, 1108 S.E. Grand ave., Portland 14, or AFSC headquarters, 1830 Sutter st., San Francisco.

The Family Council

Editor's note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a women's editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual report. The Family Council does not give advice; it merely reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

Gale F.—My husband supports his brother.

Stanley F.—I want to stand by him until he succeeds.

Gale F.—I hate to be the kind of wife who meddles in her husband's relations with his family, but I feel in this case I have just cause.

For some ten years, my husband has been subsidizing his younger brother in an acting career that has so far resulted in absolutely nothing. The brother, Donald, is married and has a child—which means that the subsidy has been pretty heavy.

My husband has been quite successful in his profession and I'm afraid his brother has come to feel he is entitled to his share of our income. Now we have four young children and money does not go too far these days. I feel they should enjoy more of the benefits of their father's success.

The Council: While Stanley's loyalty to Donald is commendable, there is some question as to whether he is doing the best thing for him.

It is true that many actors have succeeded after more than ten years of failure, but it is also true that many have not. Among those who haven't there may have been many with talent. The failures, whether or not they had talent, had to pass bitter and futile years.

Donald cannot be very happy in his present situation. He is now in the position where he not only has to prove to himself, but to his brother, that the long investment in him is worthwhile. If he were forced to adjust to economic necessities, he might find there are other satisfactions in life besides acting. Stanley may be dooming his brother to unhappiness and frustration.

Stanley shows considerable guilt toward Donald for what he believes was his parents' neglect. He may have a distorted view of this, brought about by the painful difference between his situation and his brother's. But even if he is right, he can never make up for what his parents did. He may be only imposing a new burden on his wronged brother.

I feel that if Donald has not been able to succeed after ten years of trying, it is time for him to turn to something else.

Stanley F.—My brother happens to have a great deal of talent. I am not the only one who thinks so. Many qualified people in the field have given him encouragement. Many an actor has succeeded after more than ten years of failure.

My wife refuses to understand that Donald has had to make sacrifices for me in the past. My parents did not have much money, but they centered all their hopes in me and scrimped and saved in order to get me through my professional training. For some reason, they just neglected Donald. He did not have half the advantages I had.

My brother doesn't want to be dependent on me. His wife has worked. He has taken odd jobs, but it's still been a rough road for him. He hasn't loafed. He's done his best and I feel I should stand by him until he achieves what he wants.

'Point of Beginning' Scheduled by Groups

A group from the Footlighters theater group will present "Point of Beginning," a one-act play, for local community groups during January, February and March.

The play will be a Footlighter community-service project done in cooperation with the Southern Oregon Child Guidance Clinic association.

Five appearances have been listed with Mrs. Dunbar Carpenter, representative of the association. She is in charge of coordinating the programs for the play. Groups wishing to schedule the play are asked to telephone her at 2-4838.

The play is intended to show the effect that family, ethical and moral standards have on children.

Following the play, discussions will be led by Dr. Harry K. Danielson, psychiatrist; Celia Walker, child welfare supervisor for Jackson County Public Welfare commission, and Mary Vandenberg, social worker for the child guidance clinic.

Three or four other discussions will be named later.
