

Larson Discusses Republicanism Of Eisenhower in Recent Book

By A. ROBERT SMITH
Mail Tribune Correspondent
Washington—Arthur Larson, the new head of the U.S. Information Agency, which includes the Voice of America, has already proved himself to be one of this country's more articulate interpreters—an ability which should serve him well in his important new assignment. Larson proved it in his recent book, "A Republican Looks at His Party," in which he tries to define the New Republicanism of President Eisenhower and to argue that it is a political philosophy which is here to stay. The re-election of Eisenhower makes this book more significant than ever, for it has been read approvingly by the president himself and is, therefore, probably the best handbook now in print of what the president and his "New Republican associates are striving for in government. Subjective Account It is, of course, a subjective account, for Larson was a member of the Eisenhower team as labor undersecretary when he wrote the book. Its publication just prior to the fall election campaign put it into the political category. Nevertheless, it is a very meaty tract, full of contentions which most Democrats—and many Republicans—would not accept. It is largely an expression of the liberal element in the GOP which, if it would admit it, feels more uncomfortable with the doctrines of William McKinley than those of Franklin D. Roosevelt. And yet the New Republicanism, Larson argues, is not just the New Deal dressed in a new double-breasted business suit. "The humanitarian ideas of the New Deal were praiseworthy and have been rightly emulated; the economic ideas were bad, and have been rightly discarded," he says. For this reason, the Eisenhower administration has extended social security instead of repealing it; but it has dropped many restrictions on business instead of extending them, because it believes "private enterprise should be released and encouraged as the proved motive force of our economy." He says the New Deal mistakenly thought production had reached a peak and that faulty distribution was the thing government had to correct. Hottest Contention Probably the hottest contention to swallow is this: "It is the genius of the Eisenhower administration's achievement that it has merged and brought into balance all the possible forces in our country. It is not against any of them. It realizes that they sometimes conflict, but it has found a way to encourage them to work together to a common benefit." He illustrates this by saying that the government of McKinley's day was against organized labor, and the administration of Roosevelt in 1936 was against business. "This administration is against neither, but is for both," Larson declares. To boil down Larson's entire argument, it is that the genius of the New Republicanism is that it has found the precise center of the political spectrum at a time when the American people had simultaneously discovered great comfort in following the middle way.

Looking Ahead Looking ahead to 1960, when the magic of Eisenhower's personality will not be available on the GOP ticket, Larson thinks "the Republicans have a strong chance of staying in power as representatives of the great majority of the voters" if they have "candidates who represent the New Republicanism, while Democratic spokesmen are obliged to attack from one extreme position or another." On the other hand, if the Republicans were to put up a presidential candidate "identified with an extreme conservative position" and the "Democrats were to seize that moment to choose a nominee who took over, "in politics—as in chess—the formula of the great middle man who holds the center holds the way, the Democratic candidate a position of almost unbeatable would almost certainly win." As for the people, "This is based on the question—may again vote in a change in able contention by Larson that political philosophy.

How many more shopping days until Christmas? If your wife is a bit of a Quaker it is a good sign. She has her Christmas shopping well in hand. If your spouse turns pale when you put the question to her and answers it accurately, that's bad. She hasn't nearly finished her shopping. How many people have you and your wife on your Christmas list? I know a fellow who has six married sisters and all of said sisters have a lot of children. Not only that, his wife has four married brothers and two married sisters and they have all been prolific producers of offspring. What a Christmas list they must have!

Those Programs In my fondness for the Dickens classic titled "A Christmas Carol," I am second to none. However, I can do without it on this year's Christmas television programs. Let us have some other Christmas classics for a change. How about "The Gifts of the Magi" by O. Henry? Or "Whistling Dick's Christmas Stoking" also by O. Henry. "Silent Night" is a beautifully hymn but after you have heard it on 50 or more television programs in a couple of days you have no longer to hear something else. There are quite a few Christmas hymns and carols that have seldom been sung over the air. Let the program director give us a little originality there. Then there is the constant repetition of that ditty about the "Red Nosed Reindeer" and incessant renditions of "Santa Claus Is Coming to Town." The television industry should offer a program for the station putting on the "best original" Christmas program.

Among the Married What is the ideal family? Many hold the view that it is a family of six. Father, mother, two sons and two daughters. How about the difference in ages of the children of this ideal family? Those who have done considerable research on family life and happy marriages say a couple should have two children in the first three or four years of marriage. They should then wait a period of four or five years before having two more. This is claimed will make the mother's task of rearing her offspring easier on her physically. It will also make it easier to handle the financial angle of four blessed events.

Passing By John Bartles, acting actor, has scored a hit in that lively stage revue titled "Shoestrings '57." John is from Meriden, Conn. There were Rosa Ponselle, the opera star, came from. Rosa was originally of the vaudeville team billed as "The Ponselle Sisters." Her sister Carmen was her partner. Rosa Ponselle is the only vaudeville singer to become a Metropolitan Opera star. So I believe, do I lose the stogie?

Sidelights Sid asked approximately how many words there are in a three act play. The answer is about 2,000. Same goes for a four act play. Number of words is regulated by time limit of a theatre showing. Why are so many men going hatless in all seasons? On that situation I have been checking. One reason is that many men think going hatless makes them look younger. Incidentally, it is said the hat that most ages a man's appearance is the Homburg. Just Horses A French bred horse, Mr. Boing, won the International handicap at Laurel, Md., that you know. However, did you know that French bred horses won 16 British classic stakes this year? These included the Derby, Oaks, St. Leger and Ascot Cup. To what is the superiority of French thoroughbreds due? It is interesting to note that French breeders place as much and at times more importance on the mare than the stallion in breeding British breeders are inclined to place too much importance on the stallion and too little on the mare.

Asides Does your wife snore? If so you undoubtedly be interested to know there has been originated what is described as "a liquid vegetable germicide" which is claimed to cure snoring. . . . It has been said, "it is all right to think you're as young as you used to be but don't try to prove it." If more men would keep that in mind there would be many less cases of heart attack.

Around Hollywood By ALINE MOSBY United Press Correspondent Hollywood — (UP) — If a television star wants to get anything done in his life, such as acquire a wife or write serious music, the only thing to do is quit TV. Donald O'Connor said today.

"When you are working every week on television, you don't have the time to assess your personal life or figure out where you're going or what your values are," explained the slender, song-and-dance man. "That's why I quit TV two years ago."

O'Connor made a "comeback" on Sunday's NBC Dinah Shore show — his first TV appearance since he ended his filmed series two years ago, and his first live TV show in three years. The vacation he took from the home screens gave him a breathing spell to catch up with his life. Got Married His accomplishments: He got married; he wrote a symphonic suite that will be performed next month by a local doctors' orchestra at a public concert; he starred in three pictures and turned dramatic actor in "The Buster Keaton Story."

"I had to give up TV because I reached the point where I was putting more into the show than I was getting out of it," he explained. "People who are just singers, or comics, or dancers, have it hard enough. It's even tougher when you have to combine all three."

Plans Two Musicals Now that he has a happy personal life and has cut loose from "playing straight man to a mule in the 'Frances' series," O'Connor figures it's time to return to television. He next plans to star in two musical "spectaculars" and will try his hand on a straight dramatic show. Next year the one-time boy hooper plans to film a screen play—a serious story to match his new expression—that he wrote once he got out of the squirrel cage of his regular film-and-television series. His symphonic suite would be used as a background score, he added. "Everybody should slow down and look over his life now and then," he said. "Sometimes you don't realize that you're not doing the things you want, or getting what you expected out of life, until you stop the regular routine. "I wouldn't have even talked or thought about getting married if I'd still been doing that regular TV show this year."
