

Gorilla Born in Zoo At Cleveland Said Already Getting Into Mischief

Columbus, Ohio—(AP)—The gorilla born at the local zoo last Saturday already is getting into mischief.

"She is beginning to move her little hands and the first thing we know, she will turn over a bucket of water in her bed," zoo Superintendent Earl Davis said today.

"I don't know how long we can keep her in the incubator," Davis said, "the way she squirms and twists. She can almost turn over now and I know we will have to make some kind of changes."

The gorilla, the only one known to be born in captivity, is kept in a regular baby incubator obtained from a local hospital. She probably will get a larger bed soon. The water container is to keep the humidity "just right."

Visitors Carefully Screened
Zoologists who thought it would be impossible for a gorilla to be born in captivity have sent hundreds of telegrams, some from Europe wanting to know everything possible about this little animal.

"There is a lot we don't know" the somewhat sleepy Davis explained. He worked nights during the holidays so other employees could have time off.

The 3½-pound baby and its mother, Christina, are "getting along fine," Davis said. The Baron, the proud papa, has become "quite a show-off" for the benefit of the few persons allowed to see the gorilla.

Davis said that newsmen, photographers, newsmen and television cameramen, and zoo officials are "carefully screened" to make sure they do not have colds.

She's 'All Gums'
"We wouldn't let anybody who sneezes within a mile of that gorilla," Davis said. "There isn't anything at Fort Knox that would buy these animals. . . . Usually gorillas cost from $5,000 to $7,000, Davis explained and increase in value as they grow older.

A contest is being sponsored by the Columbus Citizen, a Scripps-Howard newspaper, to choose a name for the gorilla. The winner will receive a $100 government bond from movie actor Clark Gable, a native Ohioan.

Zoo officials are giving the gorilla, which they affectionately call Baby, the same attention and treatment given to human infants.

"She is all gums," Davis said. "She has considerable force in those gums. Boy, can she really gum a nipple."

She is being fed by bottle.
