Plane Antennae Are Hidden Inside Now

Dallas, Tex. (U.P.)—Radio antennae on aircraft of only a decade ago were prominent masts and wires whopping around in the slipstream. Not so today. The supersonic aircraft now being built cannot have such protuberances and operate at speeds much faster than sound. Antennae today are buried inside the plane, and to do this design job a whole new class of electronics engineers was born. Chance Vought Aircraft has expanded its testing facilities to keep pace with antenna development for its aircraft and missiles. A crew of 17 men work with various sizes of plane and missile models. When high speeds forced relocation of radio antennae inside jets, the move introduced a lot of new problems. The best place for radio reception might not be available because structural members or other equipment had to be located at that spot under the metal skin. This resulted in a sort of tug-of-war among various groups of designers for the available space and many compromises had to be reached. Once the antenna location is tentatively decided on by use of miniature models, full-scale models are made and the electronics gear installed in it. Most of today's fighter planes carry up to seven antennae. BANGOR GROWS UP Bangor, Mich. (U.P.)—Bangor is growing up. The village council has passed an ordinance prohibiting hunting within Bangor limits.

The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez, Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Clinic; Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Foundation

Nowadays, with many an overweight person trying either to look better or to lengthen his (or her) life, or to avoid a heart attack by lowering a high blood cholesterol, the question is "How to eat?" Often the question for the harassed housewife with a fat child or a husband with a high blood pressure is, "How to cook?" Such a wife will love the book on "Low Fat Cookery" (McGraw-Hill, New York), just published by Evelyn Stead and Gloria Warren. They are married to two physicians at Duke University Medical School. They have worked out recipes for many dishes, now so designed that their calorie content will be much lower than usual. For instance, they have made a cherry pie that contains only 8 grams of fat instead of the 93 grams usually found in this dessert. The authors say that in cooking, fat serves three purposes; first, it holds things together as in a salad dressing; second, it serves to separate things, as in pie crust where it is responsible for the flakiness; and, third, it serves to provide flavor as in the case of butter on baked potatoes.

This low-fat cooking is said to be more difficult than ordinary cooking, and the cost is about the same. The Stead family have been eating these low-fat foods now for a year and a half, and the three children from eight to 12 years of age testify that the stuff tastes good and "goes to the spot." Science Is Always Advancing I am often amused when someone writes to "take the hide off me" for gross ignorance. For instance, a while ago I wrote that I had been reading a lot of papers recently presented at a congress of hematologists (specialists in abnormalities of the blood) and had noted the statement of some of the experts that when a man with a slight tendency to bleeding marries a woman with a slight tendency to bleeding, some of their children are likely to have serious trouble, with a failure of their blood to clot properly.

My correspondents did not know that a number of women bleeders are on record, and there does not seem to be any doubt about them. Actually, I just heard from a woman who says she is a typical bleeder, and has had the diagnosis confirmed by blood experts at a great university. Another thing that my correspondents did not know is that there are a number of similar diseases marked by terrible bleeding. One is called the Christmas disease. Only an expert now can tell which disease a particular person has; and what is true for one of these diseases is not necessarily true for another similar one. All of which does not mean that every so often I will not "pull a boner." I have pulled some bad ones in the past, and I will doubtless pull many more. As I wrote recently, many people feel that they can discount science and can throw it out of court because scientists are always admitting that they have made a mistake. Actually, in most cases it is not so much a mistake as the result of a growth of knowledge or an addition to the old knowledge. We scientists are constantly finding rare exceptions to old rules. But this is as it should be; we must keep learning and advancing.

How This Newspaper Helps Advertisers...

By Having Our Temperature Taken Regularly. Every newspaper has an editorial thermometer. It's called "circulation." The paper's ups and downs in its efforts to satisfy the greatest number of editorial interests is reflected in its circulation. So that there is no possibility that the calibrations on our thermometer become blurred by self-satisfaction, we have our temperature taken regularly—by a trained A.B.C.* circulation auditor. When he leaves, there's no question of how we feel. And, we're feeling quite healthy today, thank you—an indication that we're doing our job of providing an interested audience for your sales messages. We would welcome the opportunity of showing you the A.B.C. facts on our circulation, and to explain just how our editorial program is helping to build reader interest for your advertising messages. Call us this week.
