Help Yourself to Happiness

A., Department of Education, The AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF FAMILY RELATIONS, 5247 Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles 27, California.

"Jim is a dear about everything except money. He won't spend a penny without haggling over it. We have more arguments about money than about all other things put together."

Jim has brought from a poverty-stricken childhood a fear of financial need. He is overly anxious about money; he feels secure only if he is scrutinizing each dollar as it passes through his hands. He must "put by" a substantial sum from each check for future emergency in the years to come. Jill believes that Jim's thrift is excessive. She wants new clothes, new furniture, a new car, vacation at the beach. She knows that as Jim's bank account dwindles, he becomes increasingly worried and irascible.

If she is wise, Jill decides that Jim is, by and large, a good husband, that her marriage is happy, and that spending must proceed slowly if peace is to be maintained. Jim appreciates

Jill's acquiescence and extends his efforts to "make it up to her," sometime, somehow. The marriage proceeds happily.

More marital battles are fought on the financial field than in any other area. Some skirmishes are disguises for deeper antagonisms; some are frankly struggles over money as such. Money is such an important item in today's civilization that it becomes an emotional subject in everyone's life. Social traditions, childhood patterns, necessity, according to Dr. John Levy in "The Happy Family," are all thrown together in the struggle over money. Money matters cannot always be handled rationally.

Psychological attitudes toward money are just as real as money itself. Successful family budgeting cannot be based merely upon a rigid allocation of funds to rent, food, recreation, savings, and so on. It must also take into account the emotional needs of the whole family. Budgeting must consider fears and aspirations of the partners, as well as their needs and practical desires. The one who is overly anxious must attempt to see the bent of the one who is eager to spend. Each must compromise and work together toward an ultimate pattern of sound finance. Every type of budget, whether liberal or conservative, has its problem and its advantages. Only by working together can partners approximate a satisfactory and sound arrangement which will spell happiness for all.

Having established the fact that she is a trained ballerina, Miss Hawthorne proceeded to her forte characterization.

"Biography of a Dancer" lacked some aspects of communication. This the writer feels is primarily due to the absence of adequate costuming. The fine facial pantomime was lost in the presence of a black leotard. The music for this came from the P. A. system recorded by piano and percussion instruments, a very clever piece.

The best dances of the evening were the Cordova and Carmen numbers. The very difficult castanets were most expertly played by the dancer as were also the finger cymbals. The latter properly belong in an oriental dance and no doubt were used by Miss Hawthorne in the ballet in the opera "Aida." Which reminds us that we enjoyed the very expressive use she made of her hands.

It was a very entertaining performance and the audience liked her and she liked them—she told them so.

Dancer Opens Season For Civic Music

By RICHARD D. WERNER

Jackson County Civic Music association opened its 1937 season by presenting Irene Hawthorne, ballerina and dance stylist, at the High School auditorium last night.

The usual large appreciative membership was there, too.

Having been premiere danseuse of the Metropolitan Opera, choreographer (the one who designs the steps and movements of a dance) at the Opera Nacional in Mexico City, and star ballerina for a theatre guild Broadway musical, Miss Hawthorne came to us with a full and varied repertoire.

Igor Stravinsky To Be Conductor For Philharmonic

Igor Stravinsky will conduct the New York Philharmonic-Symphony broadcast on KYJC-CBS Radio for the first time since 1933, on Sunday, January 13, at 11:30 AM-1:00 PM, PST. This broadcast will mark the second CBS Radio performance of Stravinsky's "Persephone," subtitled "Melodrama in Three Parts," by Andre Gide, for Narrator, Tenor, Chorus and Orchestra. The American premiere of the work was presented on CBS Radio's "Invitation to Music" with the composer conducting and Madeleine Milhaud as narrator.

Soloists for the January 13 performance will be Vera Zorina, narrator, and Richard Robinson, tenor, with the Westminster Choir, directed by Dr. John Finley Williamson.

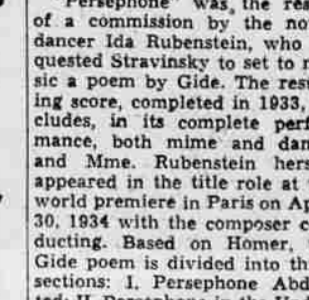

"Persephone" was the result of a commission by the noted dancer Ida Rubenstein, who requested Stravinsky to set to music a poem by Gide. The resulting score, completed in 1933, includes, in its complete performance, both mime and dance, and Mme. Rubenstein herself appeared in the title role at the world premiere in Paris on April 30, 1934 with the composer conducting. Based on Homer, the Gide poem is divided into three sections: I. Persephone Abducted; II. Persephone in the Underworld; III. Persephone Restored.

Mr. Stravinsky will open the broadcast program with the Suite from his ballet, "Petrouchka."

Miss Zorina, narrator for the performance, will be intermission guest of James Fassett.

Maxine Sullivan, Alfred Drake and Eddie Arnold, vocalists, together with pianist Vera Brodsky, are guests on KYJC-CBS Radio's The Woolworth Hour Sunday, January 13, at 1:00-2:00 PM, PST. Percy Faith directs the orchestra and chorus, and Donald Woods is master of ceremonies.
