Race Relations
Sunday Message
Told by Council

New York—(U.P.)—The National Council of Churches issued a 12-point program today by which local church groups can resist their congregations and communities of racial segregation.

To a race relations Sunday message designed to be read from the nation's pulpits Feb. 10, the federation of 30 American churches declared that Christians "must not rest until segregation is banished from every area of American life."

"The task of conquering segregation is an inescapable must confronting the Christian churches," said the message drafted by Dr. Martin Luther King, a leader of the Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott.

"Much progress has been made toward the goal of a non-segregated society but we are still far from the promised land."

The suggested program of action, drawn up by the council's Department of Racial and Cultural Relations suggested that churches secure facts, discuss and formulate concrete proposals for constructive action on public school segregation, support legislation designed to guarantee full opportunity for all, and protest legislation aimed at maintaining racial discrimination.

Other suggestions were to build up public opinion in favor of desegregating public transportation facilities, work with employers' groups, professional organizations and unions to secure equal opportunities for all workers, and work to develop "open occupancy" housing.
