Science Teaching Improvement Plan Starts in Schools

Eugene — A program involving 195 Oregon high school science and mathematics teachers is now in progress under a University of Oregon science teaching improvement program, it has been announced.

Sponsor of the program is the American Asociation for the Advancement of Science. It is being directed from the university.

Objective of the program is to develop 195 better trained educators who will interest students towards vocations of science and mathematics, according to university officials.

In-Service Training

Awareness, by education, of the acute shortage of well-qualified science and mathematics teachers prompted AAAS in working out details for a program to solve the problem. The program called for the use of science counselors in the schools to give a type of in-service training to teachers on the job.

In the spring of 1956, the university along with the University of Nebraska, Pennsylvania State university, and the University, of Texas, was designated as a center to set up a pilot study in determining how effectively this might be worked out.

Dr. Edwin G. Ebbighausen, associate professor of physics in the university, was named coordinator of the center. Two science counselors, Oscar Schaaf and Clarence Diebel were named to work with him.

Schools in 15 cities were chosen for admission to the program. They are Forest Grove, Beaverton, Hillsboro, Tigard, Albany, Salem, Junction City, Springfield, Cottage Grove, Roseburg, Sutherlin, Dillard, Grants Pass, Medford, and Phoenix.

Highway Supervisor Will Travel Old Oregon Trail For Historical Purposes

Pendleton — (U.P.) — Larry Smitton, Oregon highway maintenance supervisor here, is preparing for one of the biggest trips of his career and it won't be over the sleek fast miles of highway in Eastern Oregon he maintains.

Smitton will be traveling the Old Oregon Trail—the one originally used by emigrants to the West and which in many instances is miles away from the present Highway 30 — it's modern counterpart.

Preparing Maps

Since last summer, Smitton has been preparing maps, collecting historical accounts of settlers that penned their journey's move across eastern Oregon and talked with hundreds of pioneers who remember where the trail wound. Farmers and ranchers in the area have agreed to let him pass his jeep over the trail, full of cameras and equipment when the weather permits.

The rugged and historical journey will be made by Smitton and other highway officials from a starting point north of LaGrande on the east side of the Blue Mountains. The trail winds along the Umatilla river through wheat fields surrounding Pendleton and will end at a spot on the John Day river about 15 miles south of Blalock.

Others To Continue Journey

From that point, where Smitton stops, other highway officials will take up the trail and continue the journey into The Dalles and near Mt. Hood.

To the east, other officials will be forging the trail as it moves from LaGrande to the Idaho border.

All highway officials are cooperating in the project with their own time and effort to map and line out the trail for historical purposes before it is lost forever.

Outside of farm machinery and cattle, it will be the first time that modern day travel of the route has been undertaken.

Coal-Laden Vessel Aground Near Harbor

New Bedford, Mass. —(U.P.)— A tug was to attept today to free the 6,643 ton collier Reading from a rocky ledge near the entrance to New Bedford Harbor where the vessel is hard aground.

The Reading, en route here from Newport News, Va., struck Henrietta Rock Monday when the rock was submerged by a high tide. The ship's 34-man crew decided to remain aboard the 422-foot ship.

The tug will attempt to pull her free after an attempt is made to lighten her 11,000-ton cargo of bituminous coal.

The Coast Guard cutter Escanaba, which is standing by, reported two of the vessels holds and several of its tanks were flooded.
