Stanley Reed Quits 19-Year Career as High Court Justice

Washington—UP—Stanley F. Reed, a Kentucky's doctor's son who scaled the judicial heights and wrote some of the nation's key civil rights decisions, ends a 19-year career in the Supreme Court today. Reed, a bald 72, announced his retirement last Jan. 21, "because I am 72 years old" and the strain of his heavy court labors "no longer seems wise." Appointed by FDR.

Appointed to the nation's highest court by the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1938, Reed, a Democrat, wrote the historic decision outlawing the South's all-white primary elections and banning segregation in interstate transportation. A Kentucky lawyer and state legislator before he entered government service, Reed has served on the high court longer than all other present members except Hugo L. Black, who was appointed by Mr. Roosevelt in 1937.

He will retire at a lifetime pension of $35,000 a year, his current salary, and hopes to spend much of his time at his farm in Maysville, Ky., where he was born Dec. 31, 1884. Reed's departure leaves the court's alignment at three Republicans and five Democrats. His retirement gives President Eisenhower his fourth opportunity to make a Supreme Court appointment. No successor has yet been named.

Volume of Decisions
The court, which returned today after a four-week recess, was expected to hand down a heavy volume of decisions including all cases among 45 now under consideration in which Reed has been chosen to speak for the majority. Several Communist issues have been hanging fire for some time. They include the appeal of 14 California Communists convicted under the Smith Act, and a constitutional test of the Smith Act's membership clause. The government's giant anti-trust suit against the DuPont and General Motors corporations is also awaiting the court's ruling.

Dulles Warned UN Sanctions Could Postpone Doctrine

Washington—(UP)—A U.N. vote to impose sanctions on Israel could prolong the Senate's debate on President Eisenhower's Middle East resolution. Senate leaders delivered this warning to Secretary of State John Foster Dulles during an unusual Sunday conference at Dulles' home on the resolution's status in the Senate. Warning Precedes Debate

Their warning preceded today's opening of the second week of Senate debate on Mr. Eisenhower's proposal for protecting the Middle East from Communism. During the four days the resolution was being considered by the Senate last week, debate slowed to a near standstill while members delayed speeches to see what transpired in day to day U.N. developments.

Senate leaders had hoped to reach a final vote on the proposal last week. But with debate well behind schedule and the sanctions issue still up in the air, they were making no new predictions on when a showdown would come.

Sentiment Against Sanctions
They told Dulles Sunday, it was learned, that a U.N. sanctions move against Israel could prolong debate substantially. Sentiment in both houses of Congress is strongly against sanctions.

One of the senators at the Dulles meeting, Leverett Saltonstall (R-Mass.), a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, said that a sanctions vote "might very well" impede passage of the Eisenhower doctrine.
