Mentally Ill Children Aided By New National Organization

By GAY PAULEY United Press Correspondent

New York — (U.P.) — Billy at first glance is typical of small boys the world over. A front tooth is missing. His face could use a washing.

Billy, when you look again, is a boy tragically different from the others. He doesn't talk, he doesn't ride a bicycle or play ball. He pulls a chair into a corner of the room, turns his face to the wall, and rocks by the hour.

Billy — this is the name we shall use for him — is one of the 500,000 children, in this country who are mentally ill — an estimate from the Child Welfare league of America.

Billy, the psychiatrists say, is a schizophrenic, who at the age of eight, has "lost contact with his environment."

I met Billy during a visit to an unusual school in Brooklyn — a day school sponsored by the National League for Emotionally Disturbed Children.

One day, six months or maybe a year from now, Billy may turn his face into the room, and to the world. He may use words or sentences, instead of mumbling sounds which only he understands.

Others in the Brooklyn school, one of four therapeutic schools sponsored by the six-year-old league, have shown improvement. Some have been "graduated" into public schools, from which they once were excluded because they were too ill to fit into the normal classroom.

Only Hope "We don't talk here of cures... only of hope," said Carl Fenichel, the head of the Brooklyn school, which has a current enrollment of 29 children between four and 11 years. "But we do believe these children can be helped, and are educable."

"Around here, we feel like celebrating almost every day," said Fenichel, a father of two normal children, and an educator and psychologist with many years of experience in working with the mentally ill child. "When a youngster quits banging his head against the wall... will take solid food... even looks at us and smiles, we rejoice."

The Brooklyn school is the "pilot" for the league, which had its beginnings with 26 parents of mentally sick children. The parents, not wanting their children in state institutions and unable to afford private ones, joined into a local group at first.

But as other parents inquired into the local chapter's work, the league decided to go national. It now has 2,000 members — parents, professionals and public-spirited citizens — and the banking of some of the top psychiatrists and sociologists in the country.

Parents pay whatever they can afford to enroll their children in the league, through its fund-raising campaigns, supplies additional financial aid. Some Show Brilliance.
