

Buried Treasure by Pinkney Gage

Figure 8 Trigger Gives Any Handgun More Value

A figure 8 trigger is one with two knobs in it, the upper for firing the revolver, the lower for working the action. And any kind of a handgun that has one is worth at least a few dollars, regardless of condition.

I saw an illustration of that some weeks ago when an acquaintance paid $15 for the wreck of an old revolver. The weapon was a Savage-North navy revolver that had had the barrel sawed off and which was otherwise in wretched condition.

The buyer, however, was nobody's fool. When I asked why he had bought it, he was quick with the answer. "It was the hammer and trigger I wanted, but especially the hammer."

His reason was a sound one. Let fall to had bought another Savage-North, a .30 calibre, six-shot .30 action gun that was in good shape except for a broken hammer. It was dirty, but the trigger and action were in good enough condition so that the $15 paid for it made the weapon a truly excellent buy. Especially since by cannibalizing the $15 item he was able to restore the other to prime condition and still have an extra trigger.

When I saw the restored revolver—he let me fire it and the seven-inch, octagonal barrel tossed the bullet true—he asked me to note particularly the iron frame.

"Usually these guns are found with a bronze frame," he said, "so I got an even better buy than at first appeared."

As I congratulated him, I noted a legend on the barrel. "E. Savage Middletown Ct. H. S. North Patented June 17, 1856." "How much do you value it at now?" I asked.

"One man has already offered me $175, he replied. But I'm not going to sell for that. Not for a cent less than $250. I like it too well."

Incidentally, the value of these weapons with a bronze frame is about two-thirds as high as those with iron.
