Men Who Kill and Feel No Remorse

As a physician who has had some experience with psychopathic delinquents, I was interested to read that John G. Graham said before his execution for having blown to bits a plane carrying 44 people — just so that he could kill his mother and thereby collect some insurance money—that he didn't feel any remorse; he just couldn't feel sorry. To him people were just so many animals.

This is exactly what one would expect. Usually these people seem to have been born without any sense of responsibility, shame, decency or purpose in life. They are like mischievous children who do whatever they want to do, regardless of consequences. They swindle, they forge checks, they steal cars, they marry women and desert them—they do anything that will get them a few dollars, and they cannot feel sorry.

What is curious is that because of our stupid, outmoded, futile, and unworkable laws defining insanity, these people, no matter how "crazy" they may be in the eyes of their family, their acquaintances, and their physicians, have to be adjudged sane. Why? Because they can tell right from wrong; they can appreciate the consequences of their behavior; and they have no hallucinations or delusions. No mental hospital superintendent can hold them for a day. Because their crimes are usually petty, no jail holds them for more than a few months. Then they come out and get into mischief again.

Judge Felt Distressed

Why cannot our lawyers and judges have sense enough to talk like that? Why must we often spend three months convicting or turning loose a murderer about whose guilt there can be no reasonable question? Why do we play such a stupid and very expensive and time-consuming game?

Some years ago as I waited to testify in a trial, I marveled at the judge ruled out practically every bit of evidence that would have shown what the case was all about. I gained the impression that the judge was a fine man who felt a bit distressed over the sorry part he was playing. Unlike a British judge, he made no effort to learn why the litigants were there; all he did was to see to it that the opposing lawyers played their silly game according to the rules.

Dr. Alvarez hopes his readers will understand that it would be impossible for him to answer requests for information or to attempt to diagnose by mail. (Released by The Register and Tribune Syndicate, 1957)

Mentally Unbalanced

Recently, I read the—to me—unintelligible instructions of an able judge to a jury telling them how they were to decide whether a brutal murderer was sane or insane at the moment when, during a hold-up, he needlessly killed his victim. As I remember, the psychiatrists who had examined the man had said he had always been mentally unbalanced—he had even been for a time in a mental hospital—but they could not help the judge because they had no way of knowing if, when he pulled the trigger, he knew right from wrong, etc. Accordingly, the all-important question, on which experts would not and could not express an opinion, was put up to 12 men and women who knew nothing about insanity. In order to help them, the judge wrote out careful instructions defining the old law of "insanity." I was impressed by the fact that, with all my special knowledge in this field, I could not understand the document, and if I had been a juror in the case, I would not have known what to do.

Should Protect Society

How wonderful if the judge and jury and lawyers, instead of playing a stupid game according to ancient and outmoded rules, and instead of worrying only as to whether they should punish the fellow, had thought about ways of protecting society permanently from this mad-dog type of man. How wonderful if the fine judge could have said to the jury, "Here's the problem in a nut-shell. Here we have a man of 35 who has always been mentally unbalanced, always unable or unwilling to hold a job; always living by stealing or robbing, and perfectly willing to kill anyone. Obviously, your first duty to society is to order that this fellow be either executed or locked up for life. But now remember; if you say he was insane he will have to be locked up in our old state mental hospital, which was built about 1850 and is not constructed or run in such a way as to hold a danger-
