

Buried Treasure

by Pinkney Gage

1921 Canadian Half Dollar In Good Shape, Valuable

Two Scotians are primarily "Just a minute," he replied. "It seems to me I was given one of those when I was a boy. Let me take a look in the office safe."

He produced a 1921 Canadian half dollar in absolutely mint condition.

"Uncle Collin gave me a half dollar every birthday. A new one, he said. 'And I always kept mine despite being urged to put it in the bank at interest.' I congratulated Douglas on now being able to get $400 for it. 'But not not going to, Pink. That would be foolish. If it's worth that much to them, it must be worth double to someone else. And who knows what it will bring ten years hence?'"

So now the coin is back in the safe again—for another span of years.

LACK OF AMMO MAKES CARBINE CHEAP BUY

"The canteen goes with it," the owner of the junk shop said. "You get both the Spencer and the canteen for $15."

The canteen with its rotting canvas cover didn't interest me, despite its stencilled, faded "U.S. 7th Cav." But the Spencer carbine did.

It was a .30 caliber repeater—the short, round-barreled, wicked looking weapon whose heavy fire-power, plus that of the revolver, was the only thing that enabled the U.S. Cavalry to defeat the finest cavalries in the world—those of the Comanches, Apaches and the Sioux.

"It's clean," the owner said. "It's in good condition. Fact, I wouldn't sell it except the ammunition is so difficult to get."

It was clean and in good working order, as I saw while the owner told me it was one of the guns his father had bought as surplus back in 1903, and "with

FAKE ARTICLES ALMOST ALWAYS HIGH PRICED

When ever you come across any old brass or iron household items, and which happen to be dated, but them if the price is low, Always.

In other words, don't worry about authenticity in such a case. If only for the reason that the fake is usually high priced.

My niece Judith recently acquired a set of colonial brass andirons, which I would have sworn were imitations, and how she did it was by acting swiftly on the assumption that she couldn't lose in any case.

"If they had been something turned out in the 1930s, they would still have been a good buy at $7.50," she said.

And on the basis of weight alone, she would almost have to agree, for each andiron tipped the scales at a little over 11 pounds.

The pair were cast in the shape known as steeple top—a shape that has been imitated many times. In other words, each upright was shaped to look like a New England church steeple. The design was popular in the 18th century and therefore is today in certain circles.

Fortunately also for collectors, the arm of each andiron was stamped with the date 1769. Stamped in deep, furthermore, and on the underside and in a way that would make it quite legible 500 years hence.

It looked to me like an open invitation to the sucker, and I looked hard to see if it didn't have the name and address of the foundry too—something like Paul Revere's.

My niece was not especially disturbed at my attitude, regarding it rather tolerantly. Her reason was a sound one.

Within two weeks she sold the pair to a neighbor for $90, a man delighted to get them as a gift for his wife. As for their authenticity, no one yet knows that they are not authentic.
