BALDNESS

People write asking how to cure baldness or how to get their hair to grow in again after some or all of it has been dropped out. Books on skin diseases list a number of preparations which can be rubbed on the top of the head, but the authors do not claim much for them. In some cases massage of the scalp which for a few minutes brings in more blood might help a bit. In some cases of dandruff, the keeping of the scalp clean will help. The difficulty, of course, is that once a hair follicle has been badly injured by disease or destroyed by some disease or by atrophy, it is never going to grow a new hair no matter what anyone does to it. The most important fact that I ever learned about baldness is that when the hair comes out in comb-falls one should figure back just three months. Often, then, the person will say, "Yes, that's right; just three months ago I had a serious fever, or a terrible fright, or a nervous breakdown, or a baby." Why is the hair coming out three months later? Because, after each hair died it took three months for a new hair to push it out. Usually such a person becomes panicky and rushes to a doctor or a beauty parlor, or to a hair-quack. Would Save Money

Around Hollywood

By ALINE MOSBY

Hollywood —(U.P.)— The best show of the season in Hollywood, starring Burt Lancaster as a dancer, is unfortunately a public never got to see. Of all movieland's award events, the annual Writers' Guild Dinner turns out to be the top entertainment and top executives than the ment—better than some seen in theaters and on TV sets.

This banquet draws movie stars Academy Awards. They realize writers still are the mainstay of entertainment and they know the screen and TV scribes will outdo themselves to write a top show to be played by actors happy to let their hair down.

Gags Designed for Trade But the shindig is only the trade. This year NBC wanted to televise the party but the guild ruled most of the gags are "family jokes" the public wouldn't understand, and to change the show would take the fun away from movietowners.

Thus TV viewers missed seeing Joan Collins, Lancaster and John Lund do a musical satire of "Baby Doll" and "My Fair Lady" combined.

Many of the gags at the banquet poked fun at the troubles of RKO studio under the ownership of tire magnate Tom O'Neill and airplane magnate Howard Hughes. Actor Fred Clark portrayed the head of a plumbing company who bought a studio "with one objective in mind—to take a capital loss."

Studio's Troubles Spoofed "I don't know anything about the movie business—that's why I was picked for this job," growled Clark. "But I've run more corporations into the ground than anybody."

Groucho Marx was another hit on the writers show with a hilarious monologue about how writers' high salaries are "bankrupting" the movies. He read the salary given to the writer of "The Ten Commandments": "Moses—$150,000, payments spread over a period of 2,000 years."

Besides the guild's regular serious awards, satirical awards were handed out. Jayne Mansfield portrayed an extra honored for the best scream of the year. Another award was given to "the producer of the best pre-48 motion picture shown on the late, late television show."

Several Medford Rotarians and their wives will attend the annual conference and assembly of Rotary International in Eugene this week end.

Rotarians from 54 clubs in Oregon and southern Washington will take part in the meetings which are scheduled on the campus of the University of Oregon March 17 through 20.
