

White Now Outmodes Pink, Blue

By GAY PAULEY
 Fashion Correspondent
 White is proving the dark horse of children's fashions for summer. The color outpaces the usually favored pinks, blues and other pastels in collections from the five children's wear manufacturers who on Tuesday previewed their clothes for reporters attending the Dallas Fashion Center's seventh annual Press Week.

The snowy look is one of several trends the children swipe from us grown-ups. And, at the rate they're going, this is only a forecast of things to come.

Edward Green, manufacturer of children's lingerie, showed a show nightie in black sheer nylon. He said it was not in production, but that as a veteran in the industry, he figured it would be one day.

"By demand, from the eight and nine-year-olds," said Green. Another manufacturer, Strader Sports, disclosed that he makes sports shirts for sub-teen girls a couple of inches wider through the bust than he did a few years ago.

"The 10-year-olds now wear falsies and griddles," said he. "When a style becomes a favorite with the adults, it is immediately repeated for children," said Mrs. Gladys Coleman, designer for Facho, which features the cake-icing whites in organdy and dotted swiss.

No Laundry Problems
 For any mother worried about laundry problems, relax. Most of the whites are in fabrics which need little or no ironing.

This season the small set also copies mamma's shirtwaist dress, the number one silhouette in the $186 million Dallas market. They also have taken over the cape, the costume look of dress with coordinated coat, and the return to the 1930's look in suits with loose jacket and over-bose, popularized first by designer Coco Chanel of Paris.

Even the sheath is a teen fad, although by no means eliminating the bouffant skirts. Johnston, Inc. featured the sheath in a pale blue denim-type cotton with sailor collar and taffeta bow tie.

White also is the leading color for summertime formals for the older young set 18 to 26 said Clifton Wilhite, manufacturer of evening wear. Tulle is the leading fabric, with silk organzas and chiffons next.

Other Highlights
 Other highlights of the Dallas collections:

Ruffles abound, in what the industry calls the "sissy look" for mom and the children.

Polka dots run through the various lines, but manufacturer Ike Clark comes up with a variation; dots in the shape of tear drops, set on white pique for a startling effect.

One manufacturer, the L. and I. company, was candid about the source of some of its styles. L. J. Lissauer, an executive of the company, in describing a cotton dress and jacket observed:

"You wouldn't think that would retail for less than $20 would you? When I first saw it, it was in Neiman-Marcus' window for $89.95."

Another dress made a hit with reporters. Said Lissauer, "You should have seen the original!"
