Brazilian Composer Says He Writes Only for Intellectuals

By PAUL MOCSANYI
United Press Correspondent
New York—(U.P.)—"The people? The people?"
The voice of Heitor Villa-Lobos, the world-famous Brazilian composer, rose when he was asked if "the people" understood those of his compositions written in the ancient Brazilian language.
"The people? I don't write for the people," he said in an interview with United Press. "It is the greatest error of the Communists to think that art is for the people. It is not. I write for intellectuals."
"Not for great intellectuals. They are prejudiced. They want to hear only what they already know and approve."
"My audience is the intelligent public who have no prejudices, who will listen to the birds' songs for the same reason they listen to Beethoven—because it gives them pleasure."
"Art is entertainment. But not for the ignorant. It is entertainment for those who can enjoy things with their minds."
Listening to Villa-Lobos' conversation is like drinking champagne. It is sparkling and delightful—but it makes you somewhat dizzy at the end. Villa-Lobos has a zest which belies his 70 years.
"The trouble is that today everybody thinks he knows something," the composer continued. "In the good old times there were only two kinds of people—the artists on the one hand, the illiterates on the other."
Today's People
"Today people get a little instruction; they study a system, learn some tricks, observe what Igor Stravinsky is doing, what Villa-Lobos is doing and before you can say 'Jack Robinson,' they do a little Stravinsky or Villa-Lobos."
"The audience is baffled, stupefied, confused. How should they know who is the real composer and who is the faker?"
"No, my friend, people do not understand anything and the intellectuals do not tolerate anything that is against their grain."
"The audience of the good composer is midway between the highbrow and the lowbrow. He writes for the middle brow."
The composer was asked if modern composers should use melodies.
Melodies Needed
"There is no real music without melodies," he replied. "The trouble is that nowadays people call everything a melody. You must therefore distinguish between a declared melody and a natural melody."
"If for instance you write 'pock, pack, tick, tack, bang, bang, bang,' then you have a sequence of notes but not a melody. If however you write 'trallala lallala trallala laaa,' then you have a natural melody."
"This is not to say that artists like the late Arnold Schoenberg cannot write some really beautiful compositions. However, beauty with them will always be accident."
"I listened the other day to a record made of my cat's walk over the keys of a piano. And, believe it or not, it was beautiful."
"But would you say that my cat is a great composer?"

Program Preview Planned by PTA

McLoughlin Parent-Teacher association will meet Thursday, March 21, at 8 p.m. at the school to preview the educational program to be used next fall.
All parents of sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth grade students are invited to attend as well as parents from West Side and Oak Grove school districts.
The program will give parents an opportunity to meet with their children's teachers and counselors and to select the best course of study for the coming school year.
Union Presented Gift of Money
A gift of money from a class at the First Christian church was given to the Womens Christian Temperance Union treasurer at their last meeting. The money, which was donated on temperance Sunday, will be used for literature and films by the group.
Mrs. George A. Trobough spoke to the group on her work at a hospital in Little Rock, Ark., and reviewed a publication by the Council of Bishops, titled "Christ and Myself."
It was voted to have prayer each morning at 10 a.m. for the work done by the WCTU. March is membership month and members are encouraged to bring visitors to the meetings.
Mrs. Lucy Lynam gave the afternoon devotions.
Roll-Ups
Let leftover meats become the feature of the evening in roll-ups. This quick easy and efficient way to use leftovers will leave the family asking for more. Mix 2 cups chopped, cooked chicken, ham, veal, beef, lamb or sea food with about 1/2 cup gravy or white sauce. Make rolled biscuit dough. Roll into 18x9" rectangle. Spread with meat. Roll up beginning at wide side. Seal edges. Slice 1 1/2" thick. Place slices in well greased pan (close together for soft sides, apart for crusty sides). Bake 15 to 20 min. at 425 degrees. Serve with gravy or sauce. Makes 12.
Cheese sauces are especially good on seafood and vegetables. Use your favorite recipe for cream sauce and freshly grated, sharp American cheese. For a sharper or different flavor use Parmesan or Swiss cheese, or add a dash of Worcestershire sauce.

Longfellow Held In High Esteem by Cambridge Citizens

Cambridge, Mass.—(U.P.)—George Washington slept there, but the 200-year-old mansion is better remembered for another guest.
The name "Craigie-Longfellow House" suggests the high regard residents still hold for poet Henry Wadsworth Longfellow whose birth 150 years ago was celebrated here Feb. 27.
One of the early owners was a Scotsman named Andrew Craigie, once an apothecary general to the Continental Army. In financial difficulties, Craigie took in boarders. One of them was Longfellow.
The poet, born in Portland, Me., had come to Cambridge to take a faculty position at Harvard University. His study in the Craigie home is much the way it was at his death in 1882.
It was there that he wrote "Tales of a Wayside Inn," "Evangeline" and "The Courtship of Miles Standish." Paintings of friends and relatives still hang on the study walls. In a room directly opposite the study is a parlor where Martha Washington once held parties.
The historic home, now being suggested as a mansion for Massachusetts governors, is a two-story Colonial structure, a sort of 18th-century square peg in a 20th-century round hole.
Set back from the street and overlooking the Charles river, the mansion presents an odd contrast to modern vehicles that rush back and forth daily.
Dickens and Thackeray once dined there by candlelight and in surroundings duplicating the English atmosphere at home.
This was due to the builder and original owner, Maj. John Vassall, who adhered closely to British custom and tradition.
An ardent loyalist, Vassall was driven to the streets by a mob of agitators in 1774. He never returned to the house where he had lived for 15 years.
Washington established his headquarters there a short time afterwards, finding in the surroundings much of the taste and charm that characterized the manor estates of Virginia.
However, though some of the nation's history was written behind the mansion's dark green shutters, the memories were saved for a poet.

Brazil produces as much coffee annually as the rest of the world combined.

For a low calorie topping on a dish of ice cream try a spoon of frozen, orange juice concentrate. For those who can be more carefree with calories, crumbled green mint patties will add a timely color topping for ice cream for any meal or special occasion.

size makes the difference

When you iron clothes, your hand iron has to be hot to do a good job. Yet if your iron were four feet long, you would find it could be warm and still iron just as well. That's because you spread the heat as you move the small hand iron back and forth. Without moving, the large iron spreads its own heat evenly. Have our laundry with its larger irons and lower temperatures do a safer ironing job for you.
