

SWAYING SWANS—San Francisco Zoo director Carey Baldwin (right) accepts two black swans from Lt. Cmdr. Harold H. Henson who flew the birds in from New Zealand on a flight from "Operation Deep Freeze" in the Antarctic. Originally three in number and destined for Washington, D. C., one of the birds died in flight and the remaining two were too air sick to continue the trip. Still shaken and wobbly, the birds are now recuperating at Fleishhacker Zoo.

Waiver of Training Requirements Urged

Urbana, Ill. — (UPI) — Teacher certification official should be encouraged to waive temporarily the teacher training requirements of persons qualified in the sciences, the American Society for Engineering Education says. "This would permit the high schools to turn to valuable new sources of science teaching talent—retired scientists and college teachers, for example," an ASEE report explained. The report said that, if the certification requirements were relaxed, many industries could share their staff members to help teach science in high schools. The society's secondary schools committee said industry also could help by providing summer jobs for science teachers. And it applauded summer programs, such as those sponsored by the National Science Foundation, which bring high school science teachers back to university campuses.

The committee said the professional and social status of all high school teachers should be improved, their extra-curricular loads reduced and assistants provided to relieve them of routine. If all the coins in circulation in the country were divided equally among the population, each person would have $11.36 in copper and silver.

Traffic Near Normal As Blizzard Abates In Western Plains

By UNITED PRESS
Near normal rail and highway traffic returned to the western plains today in the wake of a devastating blizzard that claimed at least 40 lives. Rescue and work crews in the 13 states hit hardest by the storm were aided by rising temperatures in their efforts to restore normalcy to the vast region. A United Press tally since late Friday showed at least 40 storm deaths, nine of them in Illinois, eight in Texas, seven in Kansas, five in Oklahoma, three each in Nebraska and Indiana, two in Missouri and one each in New Mexico, Iowa and Ohio. Damage Estimate Unavailable A full estimate of property damage in the four-day storm, that piled up drifts as high as 30 feet, probably will not be available for several days. Southwest Bell Telephone Co. estimated its loss in wrecked equipment alone at more than $1 million. Property and livestock losses will add to that figure, but part of the loss is expected to be offset by the needed moisture provided by the storm.

Farm officials in drought-stricken Iowa estimated the blizzard moisture was worth about $1 million to crops. Four trains still were halted at stations in Kansas, waiting for plows to clear the way out. Railroad spokesmen said the trains are expected to be able to resume their journeys by today. Storm Still Active Weathermen said the storm, although no longer intense, still is active. It dumped snow from Michigan through Western Pennsylvania Tuesday night, leaving a two to six-inch blanket over sections of Pennsylvania. Flurries were expected to continue today over most of Pennsylvania and New York. Showers were predicted for Kansas, Oklahoma and Missouri, but fair skies were forecast elsewhere in the West. Warmer temperatures were expected from Kansas and Texas east to Illinois and across the Gulf states. The second manganese mining on record was in the Batesville, Ark., region between 1850 and 1952.
