

Girls Lack Self-Confidence Says Career School Director

By CANDY JONES CONOVER

New York—(U.P.)—It's fun being a schoolmarm.

As mother confessor to the Conover girls—photographic models and television actresses—and director of the Conover Career Girl school I meet intelligent women of all ages who know their personal appearance and personality projection are as essential to the future as their technical skills.

Most of these girls and women are "sleeping beauties"—very much in need of development of their self-confidence, to awaken their "get up and go on to better things" attitude.

Although countless girls have used our personal improvement training with modeling and television their ultimate goal, equally as many were aiming for more stable career fields.

Right now we have an interesting assortment of students. An Egyptian debutante, a Persian tea-ager, a secretary from Harrisburg, a Southern belle girl come to us from all over the globe.

Regardless of age category, girls from different parts of the country and world have beauty and figure problems so distinct that it's hardly necessary to hear them speak to know where they're from.

Generally speaking, most girls from south of the Mason-Dixon Line have excess inches around the hips, but walk and stand more gracefully than New England girls.

Girls from the Middle-Atlantic states quite often have poor posture but usually project great warmth of personality.

From the Middle West right down to Texas, the girls seem most lacking in self-assurance and poise, but have excellent figures. And the girls from the Western part of the country are in particular need of diction correction and speech polishing, but are most often owners of the prettiest complexions.

European girls are nearly all too rounded in their measurements, from top to bottom, but seem to be the most eager to improve themselves and seem to learn the most rapidly.

Regardless of home base, they all want to adapt for themselves today's beauty-style look of "fair lady" elegance. And only a "square lady" is unaware that this seemingly natural beauty look is accomplished through subtle and clever makeup.

The two facial features calling for the most skilled of make-up know-how are the eyes and the lips—they are the focal point of today's look of believable beauty.

Mis-shaped eyebrows, for instance, detract from lovely eyes, so the brows must be carefully touched up and helped along with brush or pencil.

A gently curving lip-line applied with a brush adds to facial animation. You can tell if the lip-line is wide enough this way: Smile a broad grin at the mirror, and see if you can draw an imaginary straight line directly from the corners of your mouth, up over your cheeks, and straight to the pupils of your eyes.

Tiny waists are a must. Narrow, trim hips, too, and we have just added a new type of buttocks-firming exercise because of Dior's latest hand-writing on the wall—the new girdle to serve as an uplift.

From what I gather, Dior's idea is to round and lift the hips, similar to the "little girl" shape.

Girl talk in our establishment has it that few will need padding. Now I ask you!

Kathleen McCarty In Nurse Class

Miss Kathleen McCarty, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm McCarty, 2618 Tagle Rock road, will be one of 11 student nurses to receive caps in a traditional capping ceremony tonight in Mount Tabor Seventh-day Adventist church, Portland.

Young women of the group, members of Walla Walla College School of Nursing, have completed their probationary period at the school's clinical division, Portland Sanitarium and Hospital, and will become full-fledged members of the Class of '59, Section I. Twenty-five students, now attending the college, will begin their work at the hospital in June, and will comprise Section II of the class.

Miss McCarty will leave Portland immediately after the ceremony to spend several days in Medford visiting her parents before continuing her training. She is a graduate of Rogue River academy and was on the staff of Sacred Heart hospital here as a nurse aide before beginning her training.

Almost 10 quarts of milk are required to make one pound of butter.
