The Medical Roundup

A DRY ITCHY SKIN

The day the temperature drops markedly, perhaps late in October, thousands of elderly persons start scratching an itchy skin, especially over their shins. They are most likely to get this itchiness if they love to scrub themselves each morning, using much soap. With soap and water, they wash most of the fat out of their skin, and this leads to the itching.

Many a time during the months when, in my youth I worked with a skin specialist, I heard him say to an older person, "If you don't want to itch, don't bathe so much, and don't use so much soap." Probably, as we grow older, the little grease glands in our skin function more and more slowly, and this leads to dryness of our skin.

Obviously, when itching comes what we should do is to rub into our skin some cold cream or oily lotion that will put back some of the fat that we have washed out. Sometimes when the itching is particularly bad, it helps much to use carbolyzed petrolatum. The carbolic acid in this preparation serves as a local anesthetic.

People ask what to do for infected kidneys. If I were to be laboring with a urinary infection, I would do this to see if both kidneys were functioning, and to rule out the presence of stones in either the kidneys or the bladder. In the presence of stones it is often hard to get entirely rid of a urinary infection. It will keep coming back.

Elderly men with urinary infection are likely to have stagnation of the urine in the bladder due to obstruction produced by an enlarged prostate gland. Especially if the results of treatment of a urinary infection are poor, the urologist will want to look into the bladder with a cystoscope, or lighted tube. He may find that the infected urine is coming from only one kidney, or that the disease is a cystitis or inflammation of the bladder wall.

If the person should have any tendency to tuberculosis, the doctor will be particularly careful to rule out this disease in the kidneys or the bladder or a testicle. If he should find stones in the kidneys or bladder he would want to operate and remove them.

Women are much more subject to infections of the urinary tract than are men, perhaps because in them the tube that leads out of the bladder is so short that germs can travel up through it. Some women are particularly subject to this type of infection. Little girls are so subject to urinary infections that always, when puzzled over a fever in a girl, the physician will have the urine looked at for bacteria.

In all such testing it is well that the patient pass urine in the doctor's office so that it will be fresh. A few germs in the urine can soon multiply when the sample is kept in a warm place. Oftentimes, if the physician is to be sure about bacteria, especially in the urine of a woman, he must remove a specimen by a little tube called a catheter, and then culture it in a special test tube which is left over-night in a warm incubator. Particularly in the cases of young persons with a scarlet fever type of infection the tubules of the kidneys can become infected, and the result can be some destruction of the kidney substance with later scarring.

Many persons with a urinary infection have what is called a pyelitis or an infection of the "pelvis" of the kidney or cavity into which the urine drains before it runs down the ureter into the bladder. Pregnant women are rather subject to this type of infection.

The Child Who Fell on His Head
Mothers tell me of their worries about a child who perhaps fell on his head, or got kicked by a horse, or got hit in the head by a baseball. Most of the children so injured suffer no permanent trouble. If at the time of the injury and immediately afterward the child remains wide-awake and lively, there is little to worry about. If, however, the child becomes sleepy and dull, and pays no attention to the people around him, the attending physician will call in a neurologist. In some cases he will decide that there has been a blood clot formed on the surface of the brain, and then this can be removed.

Grange Notes

Central Point Grange
The all girl drill teams of the Central Point Grange will exemplify the degree work in April. The first and second degrees are to be given April 5 and the third and fourth on April 19. Members of other granges who have candidates are asked to get in touch with Master Velda Mangson.

Mrs. O. T. Wilson will have charge of the display table she has asked Carl Richardson to bring his stuffed bird collection. The serving committee will be the Harold Gebhards Home Bells and Walter Jensens.

We were happy to have as our guest at the last meeting Mr. and Mrs. Robert Warren and Mr. and Mrs. G. Rader of Roxy Ann, Sadie Cypers of Sams Valley and Mrs. Cinciad of Eagle Pt.
