Ashland Bethel had 31 girls present along with their guardian, Mrs. Gerald Reed; associate guardian, Thomas Laird; and past guardian, Mrs. J. R. Clary.

Honored guests present were Miss Mary Gail Hodgins of Ashland; past queens present were Miss Phyllis Lay, Ashland and Miss Judy Lobdell, Bethel 55; and princesses present were Miss Kay Harris and Miss Pat Brewer of Ashland.

Other guests present were Andrew Stevens, Phoenix, past associate grand guardian of the state of Oregon; Mrs. Evelyn Sult, grand fourth messenger; Mrs. Paul Selby, Medford, grand librarian; Miss Margaret Selby, grand Bethel marshal; Lem Manning, past associate guardian, Bethel 14 and Bethel 55; Mrs. Wendel Spence, past guardian, Bethel 14; and Allan Rodgers, associate guardian of Shady Cove Bethel.

The next table had a year old doll in the center with balloons and other party favors designating a first birthday party, and the third table held a five tiered birthday cake with figurines representing the five line officers of the Bethel. Purple and white tapers centered the table.

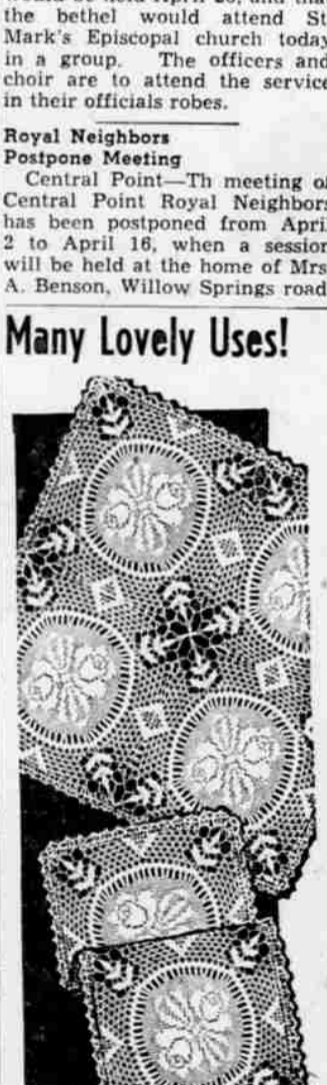

Mrs. Crump and Mrs. Elhart cut and served the cake.

Potpourri

The conversation at the reunion held last Saturday night at Rogue Valley Country club by the class of 1937, MHS, was just real interesting. For instance:

"Do you see that man over there?" said one woman. "Well, he was the first boy ever to kiss me. I slapped his face. Real hard."

And then there was the look on Don Porterfield's face when his wife, the former Frankie Rinabarger, led a class yell. Mr. Porterfield came tearing out to ask excitedly what had happened to the photographer, and when he found out that the man was gone, (it was nearing 11 p.m.) practically wrung his hands. "I've got to have a picture of this," he said. "I can hardly believe it. Why, in all these years, she never told me that she was a yell leader! Wait till the kids hear this. They won't believe it, either." He sounded incredulous — and a little proud.

Then there was the woman who said, musingly, "They haven't changed. The noisy ones are still noisy and the quiet ones are still quiet."

There was a lot of good-natured banter, and when Dick Woodcock introduced Bob Morris, he said Mr. M. was still looking for parts of his 1935 Ford which disappeared on a certain picnic.

Out of the 176 graduates in the class, a total of 152 were contacted by the committee, and many came from a distance. These included Ruth True Anderson, who came all the way from Imperial Beach, Calif., and Emory Culbertson, who came from Beverly Hills, Mrs. Betty Mae Childress Haugen came down from Portland, and Mrs. Porterfield and her husband from Tulelake, Calif.

From Klamath Falls was Mrs. Bertha Tjoelker Thurman, and Carlin Platt Davis and her husband drove up from Redding. Mrs. Bernice Moon Durnithan traveled from Mentone, Calif., and Duane Estes from Myrtle Creek.

Everyone seemed to be glad to see Ardo Stocks, now living in Sacramento. Ardo, who as a senior in '37 had been MHS student body president, was popular then and apparently still is. His classmates were as pleased as punch when Mr. S. turned out to be the winner of a silver tray, inscribed just for the reunion occasion. Potpourri thought maybe the winning had been "arranged" but Mrs. Morris and Mrs. Hoag (Edith Whillock) earnestly said no.

One thing disturbed Mrs. Hoag. She was valedictorian of the class, and spent an hour or two Saturday night trying to remember who had been salutatorian. The last time we saw her, she was still trying to recall the name.

One member of the class not present was Kathryn Mead — she is in far-away Arabia. Another one who couldn't come to the reunion was Ed Carter, now on the medical faculty of an eastern university.

But those who were at the reunion had a wonderful time and kept promising one another that they would have another one in 1977. Even made a date with the society editor to take pictures.

Medfordites who were in S.F. the day of the earthquake have interesting tales to tell. Mrs. Royal Bebb was in the Emporium about to take the escalator down to a lower floor. She looked at the moving stairs, and for some reason hesitated. At that moment she said a rumbling and roar began and the big building began to tremble.

Mrs. B. decided that "ignorance is bliss" for never having been through an earthquake before, she thought there was something the matter with the escalator, and just calmly stood there until she learned — from the panicky shoppers — what was really happening.

Lester and Alice Cass were on the streets, downtown. Lester had never experienced a quake either, but about the time the noise began and the sidewalks started to buckle, he grabbed his wife's arm and hustled her out into the middle of the street. The bewildered Mrs. C. saw a huge bus bearing down on them and ran back to the sidewalk only to be jerked away again just in time to be saved from a big plate glass window which fell out with a crash. By this time the bus had stopped and looking up and down the street the Medford couple saw that they had done the right thing — for blocks in all directions everyone was crowded into the middle of the streets.

Not having much time or inclination for beauty aids (a certain hair stylist here once declared that we certainly showed it, too) Potpourri didn't meet Madame Mireille Perrin professionally last week. However Madame Perrin, who was here to demonstrate a cosmetic line, dropped around by our desk and the meeting turned out to be most stimulating.

Madame Perrin looked exactly as Potpourri thinks a French-woman should look. She wore a smart navy blue suit, matching hat, shoes, and gloves with beads and earrings providing a touch of white. Her makeup was becoming and her accent delightful.

Madame Perrin said she came to America nine years ago because "it is the land of bread and democracy" and added "I came here with a lot of illusions about the United States—and I have not lost any of them. This is a wonderful country." She said she worked as a secretary in a U. S. Army unit in France at the end of World War II and praised the conduct and manners of the officers. Madame Perrin said she thought the manners of the U. S. Army officers were superior in many ways to those of Frenchmen. Her own son, now a student at USC, has already "served his stint" in the U. S. armed forces.

Potpourri, suffering from a heavy cold with ear complications, complained to a cohort that we couldn't hear the sound of our own voice. "Well, every cloud has a silver lining," said EA, with a big grin.—O.S.

A Tribute To Our Business and Professional Women's Clubs!

In our city, and in cities throughout the nation, well-organized groups of outstanding women are doing a great work which should command the deepest admiration and respect of all of us. These are the enthusiastic members of the Business and Professional Women's Clubs—women of virtually all ages who are making their mark in the world of commercial affairs, the entertainment field, in industry, arts, transportation, railroading and even in the planning and building of better homes. The ideals of these Clubs are—to elevate the standards of women in business and in professions; to promote the interests of these women, to increase the spirit of cooperation among them; to extend opportunities for them through educational, scientific and vocational activities. Most of these women, in addition to being "career girls," are also wives and mothers . . . the spiritual, moral, economic and stabilizing backbone of America. With abundant pride we salute these Business and Professional Women. They are shining examples of what good citizens should be.

Size Three Coat Now on Market For Tiny Women

By GAY PAULEY
United Press Correspondent
New York — (U.P.) — Strange things are happening in the never-dull world of fashion.

The size three for women makes its debut this spring, joining the ranks of the fives and sevens we used to consider minuscule in the measurement department. So apparently there still are plenty of shorties in this vitamin-fed population gradually growing taller.

The three is the brain-child of Oppenheimer-Franken, a New York coat manufacturer. S. Oppenheimer, company vice president, said "We're trying it as an experiment."

Bergdorf Goodman, the New York shop featuring the three, reports sales are excellent. "A size five coat swamps the tiny woman," said a store spokesman.

No one's making the three in suits or dresses. Not yet anyway. "A woman who wears a three coat probably takes a five dress," said Oppenheimer.

Pretty Small
Either is pretty small. Ann Fogarty, a designer who helped to pioneer the five and seven in the dress industry, said the five fits the woman with a 21-inch waist.

She has no immediate plans for making threes.

Two designers, France's Christian Dior and Italy's Emilio Pucci, are out with girdles constructed to uplift and round, rather than flatten the derriere.

Pucci's design, made in this country by Formfit, will be available by May.

Three Make Visit
Mrs. Marvin L. Stevens, 604 West Jackson street, and three year old daughter, Rhonda, and Mrs. Charles Tennant, 1008 Winchester avenue, have returned from a three day visit to Disneyland.

The three left Medford March 17 and returned by bus March 21.

Beatrice Martin designs a frothy white bow cap of white organdy. Milliners say that white hats for spring should be feminine and frothy, and organdy is one of their favorite fabrics.

rights to Dior's design. But Sam Traub of the firm said the girde would have to go through some "modifications to be accepted here."

"It may be all right as is for the young, slim figure," he said "But the older set . . . well, I doubt it."

Even feminine feet are taking on another shape — with toes slim, pointed, and reminiscent of pre-World War 1, but without the old-time construction.

The National Shoe Institute said the new pointed toes, which "are creating a revolution in the industry," are built on a special last which gives plenty of room.

"The pointed toe . . . has made virtually obsolete shoes purchased in 1956," said the institute.
