Congress Expected To Reject Ike's Disability Plan

Washington — (U.P.) — An influential House Republican said today Congress probably will reject President Eisenhower's proposal to let the president's cabinet decide when a disabled president should be replaced.

The prediction was made by Rep. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N.Y.) as Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. went before a House Judiciary subcommittee to try to sell the administration plan.

Has Different Plan

Keating is senior Republican on the subcommittee as well as on the full committee. He is sponsoring a different plan for replacing a disabled president.

He held out hope Congress will agree to a compromise despite House Democratic Leader John W. McCormack's statement Saturday. McCormack said there is so much disagreement on the subject that "nothing will be done by this Congress."

The Constitution provides for the vice president to take over the President's duties in case of his death, resignation or "inability" to perform his duties. But it doesn't say how to determine such "inability."

Cabinet Could Decide

Mr. Eisenhower advocates a constitutional amendment that would let the president declare himself unable to do his work and delegate the vice president to take over. If the president were so ill he couldn't make such a deciesion the cabinet could do it by majority vote.

Under Keating's plan a commission representing the Supreme Court, Congress and the executive branch would decide when a president was incapacitated.

A third plan has been offered by the subcommittee chairman, Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.), who is also chairman of the full committee. This would give the vice president the responsibility of deciding when a president is disabled.

Will Rogers, the cowboy philosopher, was married at Rogers, Ark.

Search for Pilot Near Klamath Ends

Klamath Falls — (U.P.) — Search for an unidentified pilot reported seen bailing out of his plane over the Midland area near here was called off after eight hours of intensive investigation yesterday failed to turn up a trace of any flier or plane wreckage.

State police and the Klamath Falls air search and rescue unit started the search after Gill Weatherby of Klamath Falls reported seeing a man parachute from a falling plane. He said the plane appeared to be a fighter.

The Air Force said it had no planes unreported or overdue in the area.

Lake Superior has an area of 31,820 square miles and it is believed to be the largest body of fresh water to be found any place in the world.
