

Swallows Prefer Nest In Open, Study Shows

Madison, Wis.—(U.P.)—A wild-life researcher for the University of Wisconsin said tree swallows prefer their nests out in the open—away from trees.

R. S. Ellarson, who has been studying the habits of swallows in the university arboretum for eight years, concluded that his tin can nests in the open attract more tree swallows than those close to trees.

He said the location of nests has a lot to do with determining what type of birds will occupy them. Bluebirds favor nests close to trees, while wrens like nests which are placed near bushes. Ellarson also recommended that the nests should be at least 30 feet apart.
