Is That So? By Eugene Burns. Even the most lowly mammal may make a noise to indicate possession of territory, time for mating, desire for food, intimidation...

Some other words sound like what they mean even though what they signify is not a sound, point out Helena and Charlton Laird in their fascinating book, 'The Tree of Language' (World, N.Y.). To take two, skitter and slither. Now you can send a flat stone skittering over a glassy lake or you can see a snake slithering through the grass and neither the stone nor the snake will be making a sound.

Curiously, some of our words have a negative but no positive. Anything which is indelible cannot be erased, but there is no such word as delible. Even though an uncouth, unkempt person should reform his ways, he would not be couth and kept.

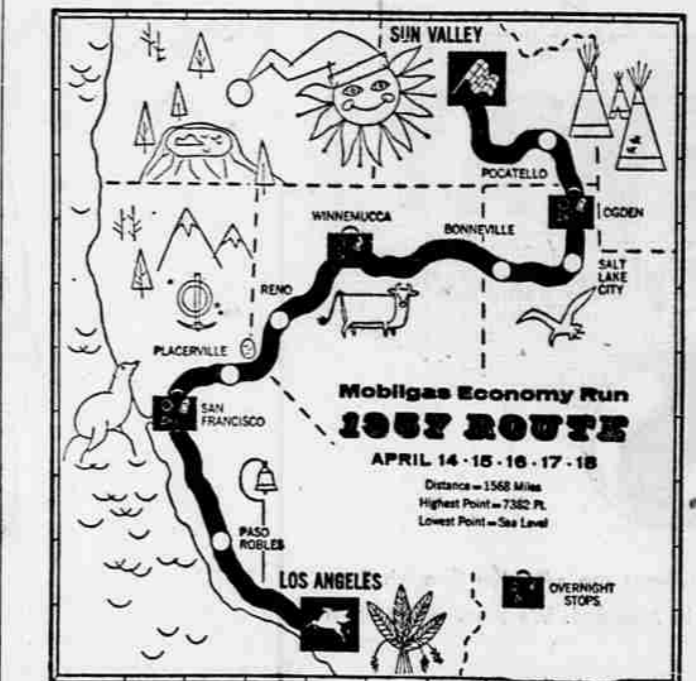

Then there are the words with opposite meanings—it took a Norwegian visitor to my study to point these out to me. "My boat is fast to the dock," and "My boat is fast in the water." Or, "The string is so raveled I can't get it undone," and "My sock is raveled—it's coming undone."

Then there are hundreds of words that sound exactly alike but have different meanings. To pair a few: ail and ale; vale and veil; bear and bare; flee and flea; need and knead; seller and cellar; tier and tear.

But there are some words that sound alike and are spelled alike but have different meanings. A date can be a fruit or an appointment; a seal is a large sea mammal or a small stamp to make an impression on paper; a steak comes from a steer but you steer a car; a quail might quail if it knew you were about to shoot it; you go to the store for a pound of butter; you pound a nail; and if your dog hasn't license, he may be taken to the pound.

Of such is our communication. (Released by McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

Ike's Chauffeur Heeds Every Sign

Washington — (U.P.) — President and Mrs. Eisenhower rode back to the White House Sunday night from their Gettysburg, Pa., farm with their driver carefully heeding every traffic sign.

The President delayed leaving the farm until 6:15 p.m. EST in order to watch on television the completion of the Masters golf tournament at Augusta, Ga.

Before leaving the farm, the President got in a few practice shots on his private putting green. Eisenhower followed the tournament closely by TV and radio throughout the week end.

The President made the 83-mile return trip to Washington in two hours and 15 minutes. He returned via the regular route through Rockville, Md., where reporters were flagged down last week end for speeding while trying to keep up with the President's car.

That trip was made to Gettysburg in an hour and 45 minutes. Sunday, Eisenhower's driver was under posted speed limits all the way and didn't run any red lights.
