Student Winner In National Quiz

John Laden Jr., student at St. Mary's High school, Medford, has been named one of the winners in the annual political quiz sponsored by Quill and Scroll, international honor society for high school journalists.

Young Laden was one of the honorable mention winners, these students scoring at least 80 per cent on the extensive examination. National winners scored 92 1/2 per cent, and special honors went to a small group of students scoring between 95 and 100 per cent.

The quiz was made out by the American Institute of Public Opinion, which manages the Gallup poll. In some schools all seniors took the test, in others it was given to social science students and in others only journalism classes took the test.

The questions missed the most were those dealing with figures or statistics, according to the announcement article. In the true-false section, the statements missed most often were: "One of President Eisenhower's favorite vacation retreats is the Augusta National Golf club in Maine" and "The six major Arab states of the Middle East are Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Jordan, Syria, Lebanon and India."

The student is a son of Mr. and Mrs. John Laden, 2104 East Jackson boulevard.

Rope Necklaces Tops for Spring; Mauve Popular

By MARY PRIME United Press Correspondent New York—(U.P.)—The fashion spotlight for jewelry will be on the ropes this spring.

Rope beads are the top style, brought back by the Chanel influence in fashion. Necklaces are a must for the plain or low-buttoned necklines of shirts and blouses and the wide necklines of spring suits.

Women can find ropes for any occasion or taste; colored or frosted beads, pearls, crystals, even rhinestones. And ropes may be worn simple in the fullest length, double, triple, knotted, or pinned to one side.

Ropes range from 20 to 30 inches to 60 inches. Probably the longest is a strand shown in Paris. It measures two yards. Most popular colors for spring are mauve, coral, red turquoise and yellow. Beads will be coordinated with fabrics. Muted pastels and the mauve tones are especially good for carrying out the one-color look.

Shapes range from round to peanut and mushroom. With Gold

One designer, Nettie Rosenstein, said she feels that women are getting tired of plain pearls. So she has designed beads that have the same effect, the luminous, go-with-anything quality.

The beads come in two main colors, pink blended with grey, and beige blended with grey. Mrs. Rosenstein also includes fresh water iris pearls in her collection. She uses pearls with gold for daytime, and pearls with white gold and rhinestones for evening.

Another jewelry firm (Trifari) features what it calls "chiffon jewels"—misty stones to go with chiffon dresses. Trifaria also recommends colored beads with some prints, all cashmeres and both bright and pastel chiffons.

Large, dramatic jewelry also is popular. Giant pins may be worn alone or clasping beads. For example big cabochon pins in topaz, emerald, ruby or turquoise worn with pearls, or colorful beads with a pin of matching or blending stones. And bar pins are making a come-back.

So-called "conversation piece pins" also will be seen this spring. Some examples—a flower cart with moving wheels, a champagne glass with pearl bubbles, and a jade butterfly with rhinestone and gold wings that flutter.
