New York Night Clubs Hit By Entertainment Tax, TV; Many Famous Ones Closing

New York —(U.P.)— You ask which night clubs to hit on your trip to New York. It would be easier to tell you the ones you can't be hit by.

You can't go to the Diamond Horseshoe, Martinique, La Conga, Havana-Madrid, Versailles, Beachcomber, Leon and Eddie's, Paradise and Casino International. Some of the hotel dancing rooms have shut shop.

El Morocco just got slapped with a tax lien for almost $850,000. Manager John Perona says he won't close but what happened to him is the kind of bad news the clubs have been getting in giant doses since the war.

Benito Collada, a Spanish playwright's son who runs El Chico in Greenwhich Village, says if it keeps on the way it's going there won't be any night life in New York.

"They're closing all over the place," according to Ben, "and there hasn't been a new fully-equipped night club started in this town in 10 years that I know of. It's a myth that New York is the night club center. The Tropicana in Havana would hold all the patrons of every New York club combined.

"Here the Stork Club and '21' don't have shows. So what do you have left among the big names? The Latin Quarter and the Copacabana."

Ben and other owners put the main blame on Uncle Sam for their troubles—the tax charged anywhere there is singing or dancing.

"The entertainment tax is murdering this business," he says. "The federal government add 20 per cent and the city adds another five per cent to every bill. The people squawk about the tax, not the bill. The government must put down the tax at least to 10 per cent. The government would gain more income from the increased trade."

The tax has hurt the clubs but so have television and the changed mood of America. People stay home more and go to bed earlier. If you're looking for a quiet place to chat in New York about 2 a.m., go to a night club. On week days the tables are set for solitarie.

"People come to New York," says Ben, "and sit in air conditioned hotels watching the same TV shows they saw back home. Or they get free untaxed tickets to TV shows."

But Ben, who starts his 33rd year at El Chico this month, thinks there still are plenty of red-blooded, green-lined Americans anxious to hit the clubs.

"How can a boy find out about a girl unless he gets on a dance floor and holds her in his arms?" he asked. "Show her television, huh?"

Two Cars Needed To Get Man To Work

Knoxville, Tenn.—(U.P.)— For the past month it has taken two cars to get W. Earl White to his job and back each day—ever since the bridge collapsed on his private road.

White, a printer for the Knoxville Journal, did not know it was his road until the county refused to rebuild a bridge over a creek when it collapsed.

Unable to afford a new bridge, White bought a second car so he can keep one on each side of the creek and ride to work relay style. He wades across the shallow creek to change cars.
