Our sincere thanks to all. Mrs. Jewel Byrnes and family.

Women Tell of Threat Unless Paper Signed

Mrs. Mary Childress, who said she is "not a prostitute" although she was arrested as one in 1933, said she signed the same affidavit as a witness.

Both said they signed the affidavit because Mimiely threatened to jail them or send them to a mental hospital.

Mrs. Childress said she is "not acquainted" with Elkins and cannot testify on the truth or falsity of the statements made against him.

Mrs. Weeks was the first of the two women to testify that she signed a false affidavit.

Her affidavit was offered to the committee last month by Schrunck. It accused Elkins of taking profits from prostitution, using narcotics, and "doctoring" tape recordings which Elkins used as evidence against Teamsters Union officials and Schrunck.

Elkins had accused the teamsters leaders of running various types of vice and gambling in Portland with Schrunck's consent and cooperation.

Mrs. Weeks said Mimiely led her and Mrs. Childress, to make the false statements about Elkins.

"They made it plain I'd be in Salem, Ore., for six months, be held for interrogation, and possibly go to prison for something I didn't do," Mrs. Weeks testified.

She said that "by Salem" she meant a state hospital in Salem for narcotics addicts and insane persons.

Swears No Threats Made
Mimiely, a small, ruddy-faced man, preceded Mrs. Weeks to the witness stand and swore he made no threats to the women.

He said he had driven them back to Portland from Laredo, Tex., where they were arrested after being deported from Mexico.

He said he made no suggestions about the content of their affidavits.

"It's their story, not mine," Mimiely said. He was a deputy under Schrunck during the seven years Schrunck was sheriff before becoming mayor of Portland.

But Mrs. Weeks said that Mimiely during the long trip from Texas "let us know he'd make it very hard for us if we didn't give a statement."

Mrs. Weeks told the committee she has no permanent address. Her mother lives in Klamath Falls, Ore., she said.

Arc by Lukens Steel Paces Active Market

New York—(U.P.)—Lukens Steel swung through an arc of more than 12 points today to enliven an already active, higher stock market.

Trades for the day swelled to a new high for 1957. Industrial shares set a new high since Jan. 10 and rails registered their second rise in nine sessions.

Aircrafts shook off their recent jitters of lower defense spending talk and ran up one to three points at their best. Coppers strengthened on hopes for firmer prices. Steels generally advanced. Chrysler again led motors up. Oils ruled strong. Sugars continued to display strength. Special issues produced some wide gains.
