Many Jobs Open For Graduates in Home Economics

Corvallis—A call for more women—and men—students to take advantage of career opportunities in the field of home economics has been voiced by Dean Miriam G. Scholl of Oregon State college, who says there are "at least three times as many jobs as graduates this year."

A recruitment program is needed to make high school and college students more aware of home economics opportunities, Dean Scholl insists.

Greatest calls at present, she says, are for college and high school teachers, for dietitians and food service administrators, and for business, communications, and research workers.

Men, who have tended to consider the school of home economics as a "for women only" proposition, are finding there is a place for them in such work as commercial food service and clothing and textile merchandising, retailing and manufacturing, according to the OSC leader.

OSC offers minors in clothing and textiles and in institutional management for men students in the school of business and technology.

For women, home economics offers a "double future," Dean Scholl points out. It prepares them for homemaking and for professional work as well.

In many cases, the futures are combined for six out of every 10 working women in the U. S. today are married, she explains.

Graduate study, which enhances chances for college and research positions, is attracting an increasing number of students, Dean Scholl said. Numerous scholarships and assistantships are available.

OSC will have 84 women graduates in home economics this June. Forty-four of them have been taking home economics education in preparation for high school teaching jobs. Twenty-four of the 84 are married.
