A Tear-Able Game

Ida M. Pardue

Divide the players into two teams. Have them line up at opposite ends of the room, and on a small table between them place two sheets of newspaper.

At the word GO, one player from each side runs to the table, picks up his team's sheet of paper and tears a hole in it. Then he runs back to tag the next player in line. This is repeated down the line until one team is finished. They are the winners—the most tear-able players!

Animal Antics

Frank A. Dickson

If you are as clever as a monkey, you can create a zoo of ten animals out of these similes.

Sharp Eyes

Eileen Daly

This is a good time-passer when you're traveling in a car or train. To get ready, cut about ten card-sized pieces of heavy paper. Print on each the name of something you are likely to see along the way. Make a few quite easy, some harder.

You might use these suggestions or make up your own: smoke, red truck, church, pig, yellow flower, ladder, house being built, a car the same as yours, school, blonde girl, baby, man on tractor, out-of-state license, side road on left, weather vane, brick house, barn with closed doors, girl in jeans.

To play the game, the first player draws a card and reads it aloud (or if he can't read, you read it to him). The first one to spy the object gets the card.

Then the second player draws and reads a card. Again the first one to spot the object gets the card.

The player who holds the most cards at the end is the sharp-eyed winner of the game.

Let's Draw a Cat!

Ann Davidow

Draw a bowl, and nicely do it. There is really nothing to it.

Two curves drop down, two points arise.

Looks strange, but I do believe my eyes.

Some curls meet and turn away.

Yet that is how they like to stay.

Meow, meow, meow, meow!

You've got a tom cat, now!
