Wisconsin Political Leaders Prepare to Scrap Over Vacancy

By GEORGE ARMOUR
United Press Correspondent
Madison, Wis. — (U.P.) — Wisconsin political leaders Saturday prepared to scrap over the late Sen. Joseph R. McCarthy's vacant seat in the U. S. Senate.

The controversial senator's unexpected death Thursday had brought leaders of both parties to a point they hadn't expected to arrive at until 1958. Candidates were caught with their plans either unmade or half-formed.

Republican Gov. Vernon Thomson was expected to order a special election, but not until some time after McCarthy's burial Tuesday and after a caucus with Wisconsin GOP Chairman Philip Kuehn on Thursday.

Fall Election Seen
An election date early next fall has been most frequently mentioned. Under state law, the governor can not order in more than 70 days in advance.

A rumor scurried about the legislature Friday that a special election would not be held, but that a measure would be introduced to empower Thomson to appoint a successor to McCarthy. Other states have statutes similar to this.

There is no shortage of experienced, but young, candidates in either party. The top Republican names are former Gov. Walter Kohler, former Rep. Glenn Davis and Lt. Gov. Warren Knowles. Kohler is considered an "Eisenhower Republican," not as conservative as most state party leaders would have him, but a proven vote-getter in three gubernatorial victories.

Davis is fully in tune with the party, but its endorsement last year failed to carry him to victory over veteran Sen. Alexander Wiley in the GOP primary. Davis served 10 years in Congress before taking on Wiley.

Knowles also is popular with the state organization, although he is not as conservative as Davis and has kept his name before the public with a tireless speaking campaign. Thomson is Popular

Thomson has been mentioned as a possible candidate by some on the ground that he is disenchanted with his administrative position and would like to be rid of the state's financial problems. Thomson was extremely popular as a legislator, but his standing has dropped somewhat with state GOP leaders since he has become governor.

The Democrats, who have not elected a senator in Wisconsin since 1932, also have three top candidates. They are oft-beaten gubernatorial candidate William Proxmire, the frequent spokesman for the party, State Sen. Gaylord Nelson and Rep. Harry Reuss.

Proxmire has been beaten twice by Kohler in races for the governorship and is considered by some to have had his chance at high office. Nelson has not held a statewide office, but has substantial party and labor backing.

Unemployment in State Listed at 36,400 by Group
Salem — (U.P.) — About 11,700 Oregon workers found jobs last month but 36,400 members of the labor force still were unemployed May 1, the State Unemployment Compensation commission said Saturday.

More settled weather that brought wider farm activity and some seasonal expansion in construction, lumber and logging was given as the main cause for the delayed spring pickup.

Most of the April improvement came in downstate timber areas. Nearly 8,000 new jobs were reported from the Willamette valley and other points west of the cascades. In eastern Oregon, the best showing came from Bend, Baker, Ontario, Klamath Falls and The Dalles.

A Year Ago
A year ago 28,000 persons were estimated to have been seeking jobs. While the number of weekly claims from insured workers dropped nearly a third during the month, payments to eligible workers passed $2,900,000 for the highest April in the history of the commission. More than 20,000 continuations were received last week at local offices many of which reported little demand for skilled workers in construction and lumber operations.

A sluggish demand for wood products and delayed logging activities in some sections because of continuing damp weather held back the usual pickup in seasonal operations. Some 3,000 persons found work in the Portland four-county area, but the number of jobseekers was 3,200 higher than a year ago.

Aluminum Firm Takes Options on Land

Salem — (U.P.) — The Harvey Aluminum company filed options with the Marion county recorder this week on nearly 900 acres of land in the Rosedale area containing bauxite and low-grade laterites used in the manufacture of aluminum.

The options are for two years and if exercised call for an expenditure of about $400,000. Exploratory drilling is scheduled to open soon.

The Harvey venture is the second attempt in two years to utilize the minerals in the Rolling-Hill property south of Salem. The first was by the Canadian Aluminum company, a research organization presumably acting for the Aluminum company of Canada.

The Harvey firm, with headquarters in Torrance, Calif., now is building a 60 million dollar alumina processing plant at The Dalles.
